THIS work is intended to supply what was generally felt to be a desideratum—a GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, embracing within a convenient space, and of easy reference, a much greater number of names than is usually found in similar books, even when extending to several volumes; arranged according to a uniform and methodical plan, and combining, with the utmost attainable accuracy, the most authentic information up to the present time. The Author was induced to engage in this arduous undertaking from a persuasion that his previous studies would afford him facilities for its execution, such as few have enjoyed, and from his being possessed of an extensive and valuable collection of books, maps, and notes, relating to every portion of the globe, collected during a period of more than fifteen years unremittingly devoted to geographical pursuits. He has endeavoured to render these materials available for the production of a Standard Book of General Geographical Reference, by compressing every article into the smallest space consistent with distinctness, by the adoption of a simple method of abbreviation, and by classing under one entry many places of the same name. A comparison of the following table of abbreviations and explanatory notes, with the persual of one or two of the articles, will, it is hoped, render the plan of the Work plain and intelligible. Books of this kind are often chargeable with great inaccuracy in their statements of the positions and bearings of places. This may, in part, be accounted for by the difficulty of ascertaining the proper value of foreign measurements; but it is owing chiefly to such works being mere copies of previously existing and erroneous compilations. Even in the best foreign special dictionaries, little attention is paid to this essential particular. The only remedy for this serious defect was found to be a constant reference to the best maps. Accordingly, in this Work, for the first time it is believed, the plan has been systematically followed of determining by measurement, the position, extent and bearing of every place described, comparing it, at the same time, with the most accredited printed statement. No previously existing dictionary has been followed either in method or matter; every article has been written expressly for this work from original materials, and it will be found to contain many valuable notices from recent geographical and statistical works, regarding Italy, Spain, Denmark, Russia, the Netherlands, East and West India Islands, Brazil, and other countries, which are not otherwise accessible to the English reader; as well as many changes of nomenclature introduced by the late revolution in France and other Continental states, furnished by valued foreign correspondents. A list of the most important new geographical and statistical works was prepared for the purpose of being appended to the volume, in order at once to show the value of the statements adduced, and to indicate the best authorities for further information ; but the work has so far exceeded its intended limits, that this has been reluctantly abandoned.

It formed part of the plan of the work to enter every place under its proper name, and to spell it according to the best writers in the country to which it refers ; thus French, Italian, Spanish, and German names are uniformly so written and accentuated, but the proper name is immediately followed by its corrupt English name, as Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle), Wien (Vienna), and places are generally described under the name by which they are best known in this country. For eastern names the system of spelling adopted by the Royal Geographical Society has been strictly followed. The more important places only in ancient geography, such as towns of which ruins remain, have been inserted in alphabetical order, but the ancient names of modern places are uniformly given where they are ascertained. The old provinces of France, Spain, and the Netherlands, the circles of the German Empire, and the countries forming the French Empire under Napoleon, which, though now superseded by other divisions, are still often referred to, are described in the order of the alphabet. In so far as the limited space would permit, accurate notices have been given of the geology and physical geography, the meteorological and mineralogical conditions of countries and districts. Great care has been taken to ascertain the true elevation of mountains above the level of the sea, and wherever foreign authorities have been relied on, their measurements have been uniformly rendered into English equivalents. In a book comprising such a great multiplicity of facts, derived from works written in many different languages, in each of which a different standard of measurement is used ; and in which the statements are often vague and sometimes contradictory, it is impossible altogether to avoid errors and omissions. For these allowance will be most readily made by those who are best able to detect and remedy them. But from the plan on which this work has been conducted, and the scrupulous care bestowed on every portion of its progress, it is hoped that these will be found to be unimportant.

DISTANCES ARE UNIFORMLY STATED DIRECT.

ALL MEASUREMENTS are reduced to English feet and English miles.

TEMPERATURE is given according to Fahrenheit's thermometer.

The name in italics after the leading word, generally expresses the ancient name, or a variety of the national.

In compound names the leading word is given under the specific letter with the prefix following, as, ANDREWS (St); but, in a few instances, the prefix forms the leading word, as in SAN, SANTO, SAO, &c.; and in the United States of North America, EAST, WEST, &c.

The POPULATIONS, AREAS, DISTANCES, ELEVATIONS ABOVE THE SEA, TEMPERATURE, and CAPITALS OF COUNTRIES, will be found at the beginning of each article.

All the Parishes of Great Britain are entered, however small.

POPULATIONS are given from the latest national census, government returns, and other authorities. Thus, for—

Great Britain and Ireland the census of	1841	} Is adopted throughout, except when otherwise stated, when the year is named.

ABYSSINIA, ABESSINIA or HABESH, a country of E. Africa, extending betw. lat. 7° 40' & 16° 40' N.; & lon. 34° 20' & 43° 20' E., bounded E. by Adel, N.E. by the Red Sea, N.W. by Nubia, & S. & S.E. by the country of the Gallas. It forms an elevated table-land, and contains many fertile valleys watered by numerous river courses, the chief of which are the Abai (Bahr-el-Azrek or Blue Nile), the Tacazze, & the Hawash. Many of its rivers are lost in the sands, or only reach the sea during the rainy season. Lake Dembea or Tzana, abt. 50 m. in length, is the largest in the country. The highest mtn. range is in the S.W. table-land, where the peak of Abba Yaret attains a height of 15,000 ft., & the Mt. Bnahat 14,364 ft.; the upper part of these mtns. is covered with snow, and their sides are clothed with trees and fine grass. The temp. of Abyss. is much lower than that of Nubia or Egypt, owing to the elevation of the soil, the numerous rivers, and the abundant summer rains. The mineral products of the country are iron-ore, rock-salt, and a small quantity of gold. The cultivated grains are wheat, barley, oats, maize, rice, & millet;—fruits, cotton, & coffee are also produced. All the wild animals indigenous to Africa, as lions, elephants, buffaloes, leopards, &c., are found in Abyss.; & domestic animals, horses, mules, asses, cattle, sheep, & goats, are reared in great abundance. In industry & commerce the Abyssinians have made some progress, they manuf. tanned skins for tents, shields of hide, agricultural implements, coarse cotton, & woollen-cloths, & pottery ware. The imports include raw cotton, pepper, blue & red cotton-cloth, glass, & tobacco. Abyssinia, comprised in the anc. Ethiopia, appears to have been the cradle of African civilization, but the early history of the people is merely traditional: they were converted to Christianity in the time of Constantine, and their first rulers seem to have possessed great influence: in the 6th cent. they conquered part of Yemen in Arabia. The present inhabs. have preserved nothing of their former power; the Turks on the one side, & the ferocious Gallas on the other, have almost entirely separated them from other nations. For more than a century the princes of the anc. dynasty have been deprived of their authority, and the empire has been divided into several petty states, the chf. of which are Shoa, Tigré and Amhara. Ankobar, cap. of the kingdom of Shoa, is the only place deserving the name of a town, in Abyssinia. [MASSODAH.]

It is consid. as the

2d. cap. of the Emp. Formerly the suburbs were surronded by a strong wall commanded by 12 towers and a citadel; but these are now in ruins. It has an arsenal, a cannon foundry and numerous caravanseries and bazaars. On the r. b. of the Tundja, which is crossed by a fine stone bridge, is situated the Eski-Serai, the old palace of the sultans, now much decayed. Adrianople possesses important manufs. of silks, woollens & linens, has celeb. dye works and tanneries, & an active commerce in manuf. goods, and the products of a fertile district. The chf. outlet for this commerce is the port of Enos, which was taken by the Russians 20th August 1829. Adrianople was the cap. of the Ottoman Emp. from 1366 to 1453. Hadrianopolis was founded by the Emp. Hadrian on the site of the anc. Orestia.

ADRIATIC SEA (Ital. Mare Adriatico) or GULF OF VENICE, is that part of the Medit. which extends from the S.E. at lat. 40° to the N.W. at lat. 45° 46' N. between the coasts of Italy, Illyria, and Albania. It takes its name from the city of Adria, & forms on the W. the gulf of Manfredonia, on the coast of the kingdom of Naples. The N.W. part bears the name of the Gulf of Venice. On the E. side are the gulfs of Trieste, Fiume, & Cattaro, on the coast of Austria, and of Drino in Albania. The water of this sea contains more salt than that of the ocean, and the influence of the tides is little felt. Its shores are generally low on the Venetian side; it has many shoals, and its muddy shores are covered with unwholesome marshes. Its greatest depth is only 22 fathoms, and a great part of it is less than 12 fathoms. On the Dalmatian side the waves dash against enormous rocks, or ripple among beautiful strands formed by the numerous islands which environ the coast, affording to vessels a secure retreat from storms. During summer the navigation of the gulf is safe and simple, because the prevailing wind is very favourable for leaving it, but in winter, the S.E. winds cause much destruction. The Adriatic receives few rivers of importance, except the Adige and the Po. Its greatest length, from C. Lenca to Trieste is 450 m., and its mean breadth is 90 m.

ÆFGHANISTAN (Afghan-land), an extensive inland country of Asia, lying betw. lat. 28° 50' and 36° 30' N., and lon. 62° & 72° 30' E., having E. the Punjab, S. Bwhalpoor, Sinde, & Beloochistan, W. the Persian dom., & N. Indep. Turkestan (Balkh, Koondooz, Kafirstan), from which it is separated by the Hindoo Koosh & its prolongations. Area estim. at 225,000 sq. m., and the pop. at about 5,000,000. Four-fifths of the country consist of rocks and mntns. From the table-land in the N. varying from 15,000 to 16,000 ft. in ht., summ. of Hindoo Koosh, 20,493 ft., many mountain ranges proceed to the S., E., & W., with summits occasionally rising above the limit of perpetual snow, & enclosing numerous valleys & small plains, some of which are fertile & well watered. The S.W. part of the country is a desert, with an elevation of 3,000 to 5,000 ft. Chf. rivs. the Cabool, Helmund, Gomul, Lora, &c.; but none is of great size. The morass Hamoon in the S.W. scarcely belongs to Afghanistan: the only lake of consequence is that of Ab-istada. The vegetation in the low lands is like that of India; rice, cotton, the sugar cane, millet, maize, & turmeric, are raised. In the uplands the timber-trees, herbs, & fruits of Europe, grow wild; & wheat, barley, beans, turnips, mustard, & artificial grasses, are cultivated. Cabool is supposed to excel all other cities in the variety & excellence of its fruits. Tobacco is extensively produced; & India is mostly supplied with madder from hence. Gold, silver, mercury, iron, lead, copper, antimony, coal, sulphur, & naphtha are met with. Arts & husbandry are in a very low condition; carpets are made at Herat, but other manufs. are few, & mostly confined to cotton, woollen, & silk stuffs for home use, with saddlery, harness, & cattle trappings. Sheep & goats are abundant, producing a fine wool used in manufact. of shawls. Imports, coarse cottons, indigo, muslins, silks, & brocade, ivory, wax, sandal-wood, sugar, & spices from India; horses, gold & silver, cochineal, & broad cloth from Turkestan; with some cutlery hardware, & other European goods from Russia, through Bokhara; silks, cottons, embroidery, & chintz from Persia; slaves from Arabia & Abyssinia; silks, tea, porcelain, dyes, & precious metals overland from China; & dates & cocoa nuts from Beloochistan. Altogether the imports may amount to 500,000*l.* a year. The exports consist of madder, assafetida, tobacco, fruits & horses, with furs, shawls & chintz to India; shawls, turbans, indigo, & other Indian produce to Turkestan; & the same articles, with Herat carpets, to Persia. The demand for British manufs. has lately increased so as nearly to supersede the importation of manufactured goods overland from Russia. Transit trade considerable, & wholly conducted by means of camels & horses, the employment of wheeled vehicles being impracticable. The pop. comprises Belooches, Usbeks, Huzarehs, Eimauks, Persians, and Hindoos, but the great mass are of the Afghan race, & Mohammedans of the Soonite sect. The Afghans are divided into numerous tribes or clans, the most noted of which are the Dooraunees, Eusfozyees, Ghiljies, & Lahonees; the last named being the princip. traders, & the first the tribe in which the monarchy has long been hereditary. The country is subdiv. into the three separate principalities of Cahool, Candahar, & Herat. Chf. cities Cabool, Candahar, Herat, Peshawer, Jelalabad, and Ghuznee.

ÆFIUM-KARA-HISSAR (Black Castle of Opium), a city of Asia Minor, in Anatolia, cap. of sanjjack, on a mtn. side, 50 m. S.S.E. Kutaiah. Pop. estim. at 60,000 (?). It is pretty well built: has a citadel crowning a lofty rock, numerous mosques, chapels, haths, khans, manuf. of black felts, carpets, arms, saddlery, stirrups, & a large trade in opium, grown near it, whence its name.

ÆFRAGOLA, a town of Naples, cap. cant., prov. and 6 m. N.N.E. Naples. Pop. 13,000. With extensive manufactures of straw bonnets.

ÆFRICA, Libya, one of the great divisions of the Globe, bounded N. by the Strait of Gibraltar, & the Mediterranean, which separates it from Europe. E. by the isthmus of Suez, the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, by which it is sep. from Asia. S. by the Southern Ocean, & W. by the Atlantic, which extends betw. Africa & America. Africa forms an immense peninsula joined to Asia by the isthmus of Suez, and extending from Ras-el-Krun, lat. 37° 20' N., to Cape Agulhas, lat. 34° 50' S., about 5,000 m.; & from Cape Guardafui, lon. 51° 22' E., to Cape Verde, lon. 17° 32' W., nearly an equal distance. Area estim. at 12,000,000 sq. m. Pop. 60,000,000 (?). The principal indentations of coast of Africa, are the gulfs of Sidra and Cabes on the N. in the Mediterranean, the gulf of Guinea on the W. in the Atlantic, & the Arabian gulf or Red Sea on the N.E. in the Indian Ocean. The isls. of Africa consist of 14 principal groups, of which there are in the Atlantic Ocean, the Azores, the Madeira, & Canary isls., the Cape Verds, the isls. of the gulf of Guinea, St Mathew, Ascension, & St Helena. In the Indian ocean, the isls. of Socotra, the Seychelles, Zanguibar, the Comoro isls., Madagascar and the Mascarene isls. The most prominent capes, are Bon, Blanco, Ceuta, and Serrat on the N.; Blanco, Verde, Rouge, Palmas, 3 Points, Lopez, & Negro on the W. The C. of Good Hope & C. Agulhas on the S.; & Capes Delgado & Guardafui on the E. Africa appears to consist of a series of terraces gradually rising from the coast to the interior, forming extensive plains & elevated table-lands. The best known of its mnt. systems are the range of Mt. Atlas in the N.W., extending, with its branches, from lat. 27° to 32° N.; & attaining, in some of its peaks, an elevation of more than 12,000 feet. The Mts. of Kong betw. Nigritia & N. Guinea, to the E. of which extend the Komri or Mts. of the Moon, the existence & extreme elevation of which, are inferred from the great rivs. to which they give rise, although they have not been visited by Europeans; the Mts. of Lupata in the S.E. of Africa, those of Madagascar in the isl. of the same name, & the Mts. of Abyssinia in the N.E. The princip. rivs. of Africa, are the Nile, an affl. of the Mediterranean; the Senegal, Gambia, Niger or Joliba-Qnorra, the Zaire, & the Orange which flow to the Atlantic, & the Zambeze & the Jubb, affls. of the Indian Ocean. The only known lakes of importance, are L. Tchad in the interior of Nigritia, L. Dembea or Tzana in Abyssinia, and L. Londieh in Tunis, which appears to be connected with the L. Melgrij in Algeria. Of L. Nyassi, in lat. 8° S.; lon. 30° E., little is known except its great size. Owing to the position of Africa, the greater part of it being within the torrid zone, and the great extent of its arid plains, its climate is excessive, & its temp. higher than that of any other Continent. The great characteristic feature of Africa, is the Sahara, an immense desert region stretching across the N. portion of the continent, betw. the Atlantic & the Red Sea, composed of burning plains covered with shifting sands, or arid rocks, interspersed occasionally with fertile oases. The mineral riches of Africa are little known, but supposed to be very important. Gold dust is found in most of the rivers; diamonds have recently been gathered in Maghreb (Algeria); salt occurs in many parts of the continent and in the islands. Iron, copper, silver, lead, and tin are also among its products, and indications of coal have recently been observed. Africa presents the most striking contrasts in its vegetable productions; in the vicinity of arid deserts, there are countries covered with the richest verdure; wherever the land is sufficiently watered, as on the banks of rivers, & on the declivities of mntos., vegetation is characterised by the utmost vigour and magnificence. Among its vegetable products, are the baobab, one of the giants of the vegetable world; a species of teak or oak valuable for building; the cocoa-nut tree, the date, the palm, orange, citron, olive, the papyrus, & nums. dye-woods, the coffee-tree, sugar-cane, cotton & indigo. The fauna of Africa is still very imperfectly known; it comprises the chimpanzee, a species of monkey, which most resembles man; the elephant, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, zebra, giraffe, buffalo; the lion, leopard, panther, the wolf, fox, jackal, hyena, antelopes, & bears. The chf. domestic animals, are the camel, horse, buffalo, ox, sheep, goats, & dogs. Among the birds of Africa may be noticed the ostrich, eagles, vultures, hawks, owls, cuckoos, & sun-birds. The commerce of the interior of Africa is conducted by means of caravans, & consists chiefly in gold-dust, copper, ivory, coral, gums, dye-wood, dates, and indigo, which are exchanged for European goods by traders who visit the coasts. Africa has long been the principal market for the supply of slaves to the European colonies. It is calculated that 200,000 Africans are annually sold as slaves. From 1831 to 1841 inclusive, 150 vessels, with crews amounting to 12,501, were employed on the W. coast of Africa, in the suppression of this infamous trade; 327 slavers were taken with 52,188 slaves, at a cost of 1,628,812*l.*, or 31*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* for each slave. The inhabitants of Africa comprise many varieties of the human species; the most remarkable & best known of these, are the Hottentots, & Caffres in the S.; the Negro races on the S.W., & in the interior; the Moors on the N.; the Caucasian races in Abyssinia, & the Copts of Egypt. Fétichism, a degraded superstition, is the religion of the greater number of the inhabs., being professed by nearly all the negroes, & the natives of Madagascar. A corrupt form of the Christian religion is professed in Abyssinia and part of Egypt, and Mohammedanism prevails in all the other regions. Africa is usually divided into the following countries.—N. Egypt and Barbary, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Marocco, S. of Barbary, the desert of Sahara, with the oases of Fezzan, Dar-fur, & Kordofan; on the W. Senegambia and Guinea; on the S. the Cape Colony, Caffraria, & the Hottentot country; on the E. Nubia, Abyssinia, Adel, Zanguebar, Mozambique, and Sofala; & in the centre, Soudan. A notice of each of these will be found under their proper heads. The English, French, Portuguese, Spaniards, Danes, Dutch, & Americans, have colonial establishments in Africa.

The modern city is built on a penins. (anc. the isl. of Pharos), and on the isthmus connecting it with the continent; the anc. city was on the mainland, where its ruins cover a vast extent of surface. Alexandria has a new palace of the pasha, a large naval arsenal, naval and milit. hospitals, a custom house, tribunal of commerce, prim. school of instruction, medical, naval, & other schools. In the new streets & squares it has more the aspect of a Europ. than of an African or Asiatic city. The Turkish quarter is irreg. & dirty, but the Frank quarter has many good streets, and a fine square outside the city. Country houses line a part of the anc. canal leading to the W. arm of the Nile, which was restored by Mohammed Ali. There are two ports, in the W. and best of which ships anchor in from 22 to 40 ft. water. A castle called Farillon, and serving as a landmark to sailors, replaces the famous Pharos of antiquity. Alexandria is the great emporium of Egypt. Principal exports, corn, cotton, wool, gums, soda, rice, dates, senna, feathers, & other African products, hides, and a few manuf. goods. In 1840, 66,342 bales of cotton were exported, mostly to England, France, and Austria. Principal imports, cotton, woollen, and silk goods, hardware and machinery, with timber, coal, drugs, and colonial products. In 1840 the value of the imports amounted to 1,327,396*l.*, and that of the exports to 1,072,039*l.* In 1842, 1,352 merchant vessels arrived, & 1,477 left Alexandria, mostly British, Turkish, Austrian, Tuscan, French, and Greek. Alexandria is an important station in the overland route to India. Consuls of the chief Europ. countries reside here. Of the anc. city, the cisterns, catacombs, Pompey's pillar, & the obelisk called Cleopatra's needle, are the principal remains. On Mar. 21, 1801, the French under Menou were conquered by the British under Sir R. Abercrombie, who was mortally wounded in the battle of Alexandria.

ALGERIA (French, Algérie), a country of N. Africa, Barbary, forming at present a French possession: cap. Algiers. This territory is sit. between lat. 35° & 37° N.; extending from lon. 2° 11' W. to 8° 53' E.; length about 550 m., greatest breadth about 200 m. Pop. 1st Jan. 1847, estimated at 2,808,881, composed of French troops 97,760, auxiliaries do. 7,048, European civilians 109,400, Natives 2,594,673. Algeria is bounded N. by the Mediterr., S. by the Sahara, E. by Tunis, & W. by Morocco; it is traversed throughout by the Atlas mountains, which rise in successive stages parallel with the coast, the highest points exceeding 7,000 ft. The coast is in general steep, and deficient in good ports. The chf. plains are those of Oran, Metidjah, & Shelif; the principal rivs. are the Wad-el-Gedy, which rises S. of the Atlas range, & flows to the Melgig lake; the Shelif, which rises on the borders of Sahara, & flows to the Mediterr.; the others are the Sebus, Isser, Harna, & Jafna. There are several lakes called sebkhas, which are filled with water in the rainy season, and are generally dry in summer; the chf. of these are in the prov. Algiers, the Zagries in Constantine, the Shott & the Sebkha in the S.E. the Melgig. The climate is in general temperate & healthy on the N. slopes of the mountains, but pestilential in the marshy plains. The heat is often excessive under the influence of the simumo, or hot wind of the desert. From April to Oct. the sky is constantly serene; the winter is mild, & marked by abundant rains; in 1846 there were 57 rainy days & 56 storms. The mean temp. of winter is from 54° to 65°, and of summer 74° to 104° Fahr.; but this elev. temp. is moderated by constant sea breezes. The mountains contain mines of iron, copper, & lead, but their extent is imperfectly known. In the mountains of Bou Hamra there are rich iron mines, which appear to have been worked by the Romans. The country is divided by the natives into the Tel, or country of grain crops, in the N., & the date country in the S. Vegetation is developed with great activity. The level part of the Tel, occupied by Arabs, is very fertile in cereals; & the mountainous country, occupied by the Kabyles, has extensive forests, & rich & varied vegetation. The Algerian Sahara is not, as was long supposed, a sterile desert, but a vast archipelago of oases, each of which presents an animated group of towns & vills., surrounded by olives, figs, vines, & palms. The nomade tribes of the desert rear many sheep & cattle; for their part of the desert is covered with vegetation during the rainy season. Throughout the Tel, wheat, barley, & legumes are extensively cultivated, & in some places maize, millet, & rice are raised. Cotton, indigo, & the sugar-cane also succeed well. The natives rear cattle, sheep, & goats. The horses, which are of an excellent breed, are employed only for the saddle; the camel, dromedary, ass, & mule are used for draught. Among wild animals may be noticed, the lion, panther, jackal, & antelope. The harvests are sometimes ravaged by locusts. Excellent coral and sponge is fished on the coasts. The industry of the natives, which formerly consisted chf. of weaving & the preparation of marocco leather, is, since the French domination, nearly confined to mining; the Jews alone engage in the manuf. of jewellery. Public instruction is making rapid progress in the state; on the 1st Jan. 1845, the number of pupils in the government schools was 3,327. During the first 9 months of 1846, 5,606 vessels entered the different ports of Algeria; the total imports in 1846 amount. to 111,487,395 fr., & the exports to 9,043,066 fr.; & the public revenue, which in 1840 was only 5,610,707 fr., amounted in 1846 to 24,773, 625 fr.

This country, originally inhabited by the Moors & Numidians, was afterwards under the power of the Romans & Vandals. In the 16th cent. it was invaded by Spain, but Barbarossa expelled the Spanish, & founded, under the sovereignty of Turkey, the state of Algiers, which became redoubtable to christians on account of its corsairs, and compelled many of the European states to pay tribute for the protection of their merchant vessels. Repeated attempts were made by the different European powers to subdue this nest of pirates; without effect, till 1816, when the city of Algiers was bombarded by the British under Lord Exmouth, after which they continued comparatively quiet until 1827, when the French government, to revenge an insult to their consul, resolved to send an expedition on a great scale to take possession of the country. This was accomplished in 1830; but although the French have nominal possession of the whole territory, only a small portion of the inhabitants acknowledge their authority. Algérie is divided into the provs. of Algiers, Constantine, & Oran, & governed, according to a royal ordinance of 1st Sept. 1847, by a governor-general, whose authority is chiefly military. Chf. towns Algiers, Constantine, Philippeville, Bona, Setif, Blidah, Oran, & Tiemsen.

ALPS MOUNTAINS. The Alps are the most remarkable mtns. in Europe, whether in regard to extent or elevation; they form a crescent-shaped chain, which extends from the Mediterr. between the gulfs of Lions and Genoa on the W., to the plains of Hungary on the E., nearly 600 m. in length. They may be divided into the following groups:—the W. Alps, which have a general direction from S. to N., and extend, under the names of the Maritime Alps, from the sea to Mt. Viso, near the sources of the Po; the Cottian Alps, which prolong the chain to Mt. Cenis, and include Mt. Genève; & the Graian Alps (Alpes Graie), which include Little S. Bernard, & terminate at Mt. Blanc. The E. Alps, or these chains which extend from W. to E., having much greater breadth, are separated into a N. and S. series; the former comprise the Bernese Alps, on the N. of the valley of the Rhone, the Alps of St. Gall, on N.W. of the valley of the Rhine, the Noric Alps, which may be considered as extending from L. Constance to the Kahlenberg, near Vienna, and the Styrian Alps, a small chain between the Noric and Carnic Alps. The S. series is composed of the Pennine Alps, between Mt. Blanc and Monte Rosa; the Lepontine Alps, thence to Mt. Bernardino, near the sources of the Upper Rhine; the Rhetian Alps, which terminate at Monte Croce, near the sources of the Piave; and the Carnic Alps, extending to the lowest part of the riv. Mur, which separates them from the mtns. of Bahony. Mont Blanc, which attains an elevation of 15,810 ft., is the culminating point of the Alps and of all Europe; the other princip. summits are Mt. Rosa, 15,208 ft., Finsteraarhorn, in the Bernese Alps, 14,106 ft., Mt. Viso, 12,585 ft., the Ortler Spitz in the Rhetian Alps, 12,852 ft., the Gross Glockner in the Noric Alps, 13,100 ft., the Tergler in the Carnic Alps, 9,380 ft., & the Eisenhut in the Styrian Alps. The most frequented passes are the Col de Tende in the Maritime Alps, 5,890 ft.; the pass of Mt. Genève in the Cottian Alps, 6,560 ft.; that of Mt. Cenis, 6,775 ft.; the pass of the great St Bernard, 8,150 ft., and the Simplon, 6,592 ft., both in the Pennine Alps; the pass of Mt. St Gothard, in the Lepontine Alps, 6,976 ft., the Spügen, 6,939 ft., in the Rhetian Alps, the Leibberg in the Carnic Alps, and the Semmering in the Noric Alps; the Stelvio, in the emp. of Austria, 9,100 feet, is the highest carriage pass in the Alps, and that of St. Gothard is the only one which is carried over the crest of the mtns., the others generally cross by the beds of torrents. The higher Alps are covered with perpetual snow, and present in their magnificent glaciers, the innumerable cascades which are precipitated from their summits, & the forests and meadows which cover their flanks, the most imposing and picturesque scenery in Europe. It is calculated that in the range of the Alps there are fields of ice covering an area of 1,500 sq. m., of 100 ft. in thickness; the glaciers which depend from these move more or less rapidly according to the mildness or severity of the season; their mean rate of motion, is from 12 to 25 ft. in a year, the greatest velocity, as in rivers, being at the centre. The largest rivs. of Europe, includ. the Danube, Rhine, Rhone, Inn, Drave, Save, & Po, rise in the Alps or their subordinate ranges. The central and higher ridges of the Alps consist of granite, gneiss, and other prim. rocks, flanked by a wide extent of limestone, sandstone, & slate. The higher summits ascend considerably above the lower level of perpetual snow (which in this lat. averages 8,900 ft. above the sea): the glaciers descend as low as 3,400 ft. above the sea. Wheat is raised at an elevation of 3,600 ft.; oats at 4,900 ft.; barley, at 5,100 ft.: the oak is found to the height of 4,500 ft.; pines and larches as high as 6,500 feet above the sea; and the Alpine rose reaches the limit of perpetual snow. Mineral products are chiefly iron, copper, and lead; but quicksilver, rock-salt, and some gold and silver, are met with. In the French Alps, near Grenoble, small veins containing native gold have been worked; after being neglected for half a century, the works were resumed in 1837. Notices of the principal summits and passes in the Alps will be found under their respective names.

ALTAÏ, an extensive mntn. system of Upper Asia, stretching from the 80th deg. of E. lon. to the shores of the Sea of Okhotsk, and forming the entire line of separation betw. the emps. of Russia and China. Length from E. to W., including the Aldan range, nearly 5,000 m. This chain, however, has various names in its different sections, and the term Altai is usually confined to the W. portion of the system, betw. the rivers Irtysh and Selenga, or from lon. 83° to 107° E. E. of the latter point (L. Baikal) it abuts on the ranges of the Khing-khan or Yablonoi mntns., which reach E. ward to the Pacific at the N. end of Saghalien isl. The Altai consists of several collateral ranges, the loftiest, Tanguin Oola, lying within the Chinese boundary. The mean elev. of the chains may be from 3,000 to 5,000 ft., but M. Bialukha, near the head of the Obe, is estim. at 10,300 ft. The summits are not peaked, but are nearly level plains of considerable extent, interspersed with isolated masses of granite. The points above the line of perpetual snow are all betw. lats. 49° 30' and 50°. There are many large lakes on the mountain terraces and valleys. The Altai covers, with its offsets, a large part of the Russian govns. Irkutsk, Yeniseisk, & Tomsk, and of W. Mongolia; on the S.W. it is connected with the great table-land of Chinese Turkestan; and the Irtysh, Obi, Yenisei, and Selenga rivers all rise within its limits. The princip. roads over the Altai are—1. That from Irkutsk by Lake Baikal to Kiakhta, which is the chief route for the trade betw. Russia and China.—2. From Udinsk, on the Selenga, to the mining distr. of Nertchinsk, on the Shilka, a tribut. of the Amoor. The mntns. in the western range consist chiefly of granite and prim. rocks, with newer formations of porphyry intruded. The range of the Altai is remarkable as the source of auriferous sands, of which it appears to afford an unfailling supply. Mines of gold, silver, and lead, appear to have been worked by the ancient inhabitants, and have been reopened and recently extensively wrought by the Russians. Sandstones, conglomerates, and chalk, rest on granite in the mountains surrounding Lake Baikal, and many parts of this range indicate volcanic agency. These mtns. are rich in carnelian, onyx, topaz, amethyst, & other gems. The most productive mining distr. is immediately E. of Barnaul, many of its most important mines being near Krasnoyarsk. The mining dist. of Nertchinsk is less productive, yielding only 1-4th as much metal as that of Barnaul, a disproportion chiefly attributable to the scarcity of smelting materials. These mountain regions are fitted chiefly for pasturage, though many of the valleys contain ground suitable for agriculture. Its ancient inhabitants named Tshudes, are now extinct, and have been succeeded by the present nomadic population.

AMAZON, MARANON, ORELLANA, or SOLIMOES, the chief riv. of S. America, and the largest in the world, whether regarded as to its volume, its length, or the extent of its basin. It is formed by the union of the Tunguragua & Ucayale; the former rising in Lake Lauricocha (Peru), in lat. 10° 30' S., lon. 76° 10' W.; and the head stream of the latter, the Apurimac, originating about lat. 16° S., lon. 72° W. Both rivs. have a general course at first northward; the Tunguragua, near lat. 6° S., bends eastward, and after receiving the Huallaga from the S., joins the Ucayale, about lat. 4° 25' S., lon. 72° 30' W. Here the stream has depth suffic. for almost any class of ships. Thenceforth the Amazon flows generally east through the Brazilian territory, to the Atlantic, which it enters nearly under the equator, and between lon. 48° and 50° W., its estuary widening until it is 180 m. across. Taking the Apurimac as its source, its direct length is estim. at 1,769 m., and including its windings, nearly 4,000 m.; for great part of which (viz. from the ocean to Pongo de Manseriche, lon. 76° 50' W.), it is navig. & uninterrupted by any rapid or cataract. At least 20 noble rivers, navigable to near their sources, pour their waters into it, besides numerous other less important streams. Chief tributs. the Napo, Putumayo, Yapura, and Rio Negro, from the N.; the Yavari, Jutay, Jurua, Coary, Purus, Madeira, Tapaños, and Kingu, from the S. By the Casiquiare, a branch of the Rio Negro, the Amazon has a direct and remarkable connexion with the Orinoco. The Amazon and its tributaries afford an immense inland navigation, estimated at 50,000 m.; and the extent of its basin has been computed at about two millions of sq. m., or about 2-5ths of the whole continent of S. America. The depth of the riv. is great; in mid current no bottom is found with 20 faths. The velocity of the current is pretty uniform, at the rate of 3½ ms. an hour. Tides ascend this riv. for 400 m. from the Atlantic—as far as Obidos, where the Amazon is still more than a mile in width—and near the full moon the rise of the tide occasions a formidable rush of water into the channel, sometimes bringing in several waves from 10 to 15 ft. in height; this phenomenon, called the bore, is witnessed on a smaller scale in the Ganges, and in some European rivs. The upper part of the riv., as far as the mouth of the Yavari, which forms the boundary line between Brazil and Peru, is called Maranon, thence to the mouth of the Rio Negro it is called Solimoes or Solimas, and from the Negro to its mouth, Amazon. The tropical rains swell the riv. annually to 40 & 50 ft. above its ordinary level. The Maranon attains its greatest height in Jan'y, the Solimoes in Feby., the Amazon in middle of March. In the lower part of its course, the Amazon abounds with islands, and in its estuary are Marajo and Caviana, of considerable extent. Santiago (Ecuador), S. Borja, S. Joaquim, Tabatinga, Olivenza, Matura, Serpa, Santarem, Montalegre, Para, Arayates, and Gurupa, are towns on its banks; but, with trifling exceptions, the whole country which it traverses is still in a state of nature. In 1848, a steam boat made a passage from Para, up the river as far as the Negro. The estuary of the Amazon was discovered by Pinçon in 1500; in 1539, Francis d'Orellana sailed down it from the Napo, and it obtained its name of Amazon from his having reported that he had seen armed women on its shores. Authorities, M. de la Condamine, 1745, Mawe, Pöping, Smythe.

AMERICA, or the "New World," is one of the great divisions of the globe, surpassing in magnitude all the others except Asia. Including Greenland, it extends through 135° of lat., & 145° of lon.—viz., from about lat. 80° N. to 55° S., and lon. 20° to 165° W.; separated by the Atlantic Ocean from Europe and Africa, and by the Pacific from Asia and Australia. Area, with its isls., has been variously estimated at from 14 to 15 millions of sq. m.; but its extreme N. limits are yet imperfectly known. It is divided N. of the equator, by the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, into two continents nearly equal in extent; connected by a comparatively narrow region, extending through about 15° of lat., termed Central America, and the S. extrem. of which (Isthmus of Darien or Panama) is only 28 m. across. N. America resembles the other N. continents of Europe & Asia in being deeply indented by bays and gulfs, in having extensive inland seas, and in most of its N. portion being a level region abounding in lakes; while S. America resembles Africa and Australia in general outline; like them its coasts are little broken by extensive inlets, and its lakes are comparatively small. The physical features of both the grand divisions of this continent are on the most stupendous scale. America boasts of the two largest rivers in the world, the Amazon in the S., and the Mississippi in the N.; & in the latter division its lakes form the largest collection of fresh water on the surface of the globe. The great mntn. system of this hemisphere is also the most extensive known, extending, under the various designations of Andes, Sierra Madre, Anahuac, & Rocky Mnts., from the S. to the N. extremities of the continent; and, except some peaks of the Himalaya in Asia, the Andes rise higher than any other known mntns. on the earth.

N. AMERICA, incl. Central America, extends N. wards of lat. 8° N., and betw. lon. 55° and 165° W. On its E. side are Hudson and James' Bays, the G. of St Lawrence, the Bays of Fundy, Chesapeake, and Delaware; on its S. the G. of Mexico; on its W. the Gulfs of California and Georgia, Cook Inlet, Bristol Bay, and Norton and Kotzebue Sounds. On the N. the Arctic Ocean separates it from Melville & Bathurst isls., Victoria Land, Boothia, &c. Baffin Bay and Davis' Strait divide Cockburn Land from Greenland. Ch. peninsulas of N. America, Labrador, Nova Scotia, Florida, and Old California. The mnts. of N. America are divided into several chains, of which the Alleghanies or Appalachian on the E., & the Rocky mnts. on the W., bound the great central region of N. America, drained by the Mississippi & Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Kansas, Arkansas, Rio Brava, &c. The E. part of this region is fertile, and its centre is a vast prairie; but much of its W. part appears to be rocky and barren. N. of this region the five great lakes, Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, discharge their waters Eward by the river St Lawrence into the Gulf of same name. Still farther N. is the Boreal region, occupying all the surface from Canada northwards to the shores of the Arctic Ocean and Hudson Bay; here are the Winnipeg, Manitoba, Wollaston, Great Slave, Great Bear, and Athabasca lakes, and the Mackenzie, Athabasca, Great Slave, and Great Fish rivs., mostly flowing N.ward. The Colorado, Columbia, and Great Snake rivs., with the unexplored territ. of Russian America, are W. of the Rocky Mnts., which rise much further inland from the Pacific than the Andes in S. America. Around this continent are numerous isls., incl. Newfoundland, Prince Edward, Cape Breton, and the W. Indian archipelago on the E., and several archipelagos lining the Russian and British coasts in the N.W.; the aggregate area of the N. American isls. being estimated at 150,000 sq. m.

S. AMERICA extends S.ward from about lat. 13° N., and from lon. 35° to 81° 30' W. It consists mainly of three immense plains respectively watered by the Amazon, Plata, and Orinoco rivs. The basins of the two former are inclosed by the Andes W.ward, and the mnts. of Brazil on the E.; that of the last is bounded N.ward by a cordillera of the Andes, and S. by the sierras dividing Colombia from Brazil. All the great rivs. of this continent discharge their waters into the Atlantic, except the Rio Magdalena, which, with its affls., flows between the Cordilleras of the Andes N.ward to the Caribbean Sea. Next to these large rivs. and their tributaries, are the Tocantins, Paranyhyba, San Francisco, Belmonte, Rio Grande do Sul, and Rio Negro of Patagonia, all of which enter the Atlantic. Chf. inlets, the gulfs of St George and St Matthias in Patagonia; and in Colombia the Gulf of Guayaquil and the Lake of Maracayho, united by a strait to the Caribbean Sea. L. Titicaca is the only inland lake of consequence; it is much inferior in size to L. Nicaragua in Central America. Tierra del Fuego, the largest isl. belonging to S. America, is at the S. extrem. of Patagonia, the W. coast of which country, with a part of that of Chile, is lined by numerous isls., interspersed with some of the best harbours in the Pacific.

The climate of America is almost as remarkable for its extreme vicissitudes as that of Africa for its continual heat; this is partly due to its high N. and S. latitudes, and to the great elevation of its surface. The products of every climate abound in its different regions, and in some its vegetation is most exuberant. It furnishes vast quantities of sugar, cotton, tobacco, coffee, cocoa, dye-woods, mahogany, medicinal barks; and in the precious metals it has hitherto proved richer than any other division of the globe. Early in the present century, Humboldt estimated the annual produce of S. Amer. gold and silver at 8,700,000*l.*; and at present (1848) it may be estimated at 3,500,000*l.* a-year. Though the most gigantic fossil animals have been discovered in this continent, America has now few large quadrupeds, except the bison, the musk ox, the reindeer, and some bears in the remote north. The largest beasts of prey, besides the last named, are the jaguar and puma, chiefly in S. America. But in useful animals this continent is more prolific; the llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicunna, are substitutes for the camel, sheep, & goats of the Old World; & immense troops of wild horses originally imported from Europe, and cattle, wander over the Pampas. The inferior animal tribes are in great variety, and many of them are peculiar to this hemisphere. The native inhabitants, or red Indians, are also peculiar to this continent, having the physical characters of a distinct race. The tribes of the N. and S., though differing in civilisation, & using varied dialects of one primary language, seem to have had a common origin. They are, however, much mixed by intercourse with Europeans and Negroes, and are rapidly becoming extinct. Since Columbus discovered this country, 11th October 1492, a tide of emigration has flowed from Europe to America, and by far the greater proportion of the pop. is now of European descent. Virginia was discovered by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1584, & the colonies of Virginia and New England were planted in 1607 & 1620. North America is principally peopled by Britons and their descendants, a considerable number of French in Canada, some Germans in Pennsylvania & N. York, & Dutch, Swedes, and Spaniards, in other localities. At one period nearly the whole continent was nominally, if not actually, possessed by European sovereigns; at present, except the wide regions claimed by Gt. Britain and Russia, in the extreme N., very few portions of territ. on the American main belong to European powers.—Russian America compreh. the N.W. coasts from Lat. 55° to 70° N., and lon. 141° to 168° W.—British America is bounded on the N. by the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company, and on the S. by the United States, comprising the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Labrador, Anticosti Isl., and part of Oregon.—United States extends from the British possessions in the N., to the Gulf of Mexico S., and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans. The Republic of Mexico extends from Lat. 16° to 42° N.—Central America includes the Republic of Guatemala, adjoining Mexico on the S., Yucatan, and Belize.—South America comprehends on the N. the Republics of Granada, Venezuela, and Ecuador; on the W. coast the republic of Peru, and S. of this Bolivia and Chile. Between these States and the Atlantic lie the United Provinces of La Plata. The empire of Brazil lies to the E., watered by the Atlantic, adjoining which is the small state of Paraguay. Uruguay, or Banda Oriental, lies immediately to the S. of Brazil, and Patagonia and Tierra del Fuego form the southern limits of the continent.—Guiana, on the N.E. coast N. of the Amazon r., contains the British possessions of Demerara, Essequibo, Berbice, the French possess. of Cayenne, & Dutch col. of Surinam.—The West India Islands in the Columbian Archipelago, consist of the Ba-hama islands, Great Antilles, including Cuba, Jamaica, St Domingo, Porto Rico. Smaller Antilles includ. Barbuda, Antigua, Guadalupe, Dominica, Martinique, St Lucie, Barbadoes, Granada, Tobago, St Christopher, St Vincent, Trinidad, &c.

AMSTERDAM, one of the most important cities of Europe, cap. of the prov. of N. Holland and of the kingdom of the Netherlands, is built in the form of a crescent, on the Amstel at its entrance into the Y or Ye, lat. of W. Steeple 52° 22' 5" N.; lon. 4° 53' 2" E. Pop. (1841) 211,349, of whom 23,000 were Jews. The city is connected by railw. with the Hague, Rotterdam, and Arnheim. It is built on piles of wood driven into the alluv. soil; and is divided into 2 parts by the Amstel, and intersected by numerous canals, which form 90 isls. communicating by 290 bridges. The streets, almost all ranged on the sides of canals, are well paved and lighted; the houses are built of brick & painted of different colours, & the numerous magazines filled with the most valuable produce of the Old and New Worlds, attest the riches of a city which has long possessed the commerce of the globe. Amsterdam is the seat of the administration of the marine, of which the magazines and building-yards are most extensive. Among its many scient. and literary estab. may be noted the royal atheneum with 11 professors, a valuable library, a botanic garden, and theatre of anatomy; the royal academy of the fine arts with 6 professors; the school of navigation; the royal institute of science, literature, and the fine arts; the Netherlands soc. of arts and sciences, and the soc. of Felix Meritis. Amsterdam has an observatory, a cabinet of natural history, a royal museum with a splendid and unique collection of paintings. The most remarkable buildings are the Palais-royal, formerly the Hôtel de Ville, a magnif. monument of modern architecture, and the residence of King Louis Bonaparte from 1808 to 1813. The present hôtel de ville, formerly the admiralty, the mansions of the E. &

W. India Cos.; the buildings of the Felix Meritis soc.; the exchange, the arsenal, & the barracks, capable of lodging several thousand men. Among its many ecclesiastical edifices are the Oude Kerke (old ch.), and the Nieuwe Kerke (new ch.), one of the finest in the kingdom. It has also a Scotch presbyterian and an episcopal church. It has besides, many extensive charitable institutions. The port of Harlem, the handsome bridge over the Amstel, the fine quays along the Y, and the vast basins, are also worthy of notice. Amsterdam, still justly considered one of the most commercial places in Europe, attained its greatest prosperity after the closing of the Scheldt in 1648, when it monopolized nearly all the commerce of the Indies. Its commerce decreased with the decline of the republic of Holland, and the opening of the Scheldt, and the rivalry of Antwerp and Rotterdam; but the magnificent canal of N. Holland, and the railways which now afford such facilities of communication with other parts of the kingdom & the adjoining countries, will probably soon restore it to its former prosperity. There is regular steam communication between this city & Kampen, Enkhuizen, Harlingen, & Hamburg. The bank of the Nethlds. was established here in 1814. Its industry comprises manufs. of woollen, cotton, linen, & silk fabrics, jewellery and gold lace; it has sugar, borax, sulphur and other refineries, soap, oil, glass, iron, dye, and chemical works, distilleries, breweries, tanneries, tobacco factories, and ship-building docks. Chf. imports, the products of the colonies & N. Europe, hides, linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, hardwares, rock salt, tin plates, coal, &c. Chf. exports, the produce of the Nethlds., E. and W. India possessions, cheese, butter, &c.; and the produce of the country, with corn and linens from Germany, Spain, Germ., and Engl. wools, French, Rhenish, and Hungar. wines, brandy, &c. Amsterdam has a large transit, as well as insurance and bill-broking trade. Imports in 1840, amounted in value to 7,944,958*l.*, and the exports to 6,225,083*l.*; in the same year 2,198 ships entered the port. About 250 or 260 large ships, belonging to Amsterdam, trade to the E. and W. Indies, the Mediterranean, and the Baltic.

Surface generally fertile, rising progressively from the sea to the great mntn. chain separating Cochin-China from Cambodia. Tonquin and Cambodia are alluvial plains of great fertility. The whole empire is well watered, and the country in many parts covered with dense forests, or carefully cultivated. Chief rivs. the Menam-kong, forming the boundary on the side of Siam, and the rivs. of Tonquin, Saigon, and Hué. Climate healthy, the heat being tempered by sea breezes. Inhab. similar in race to the Chinese, with an intermixture of Siamese, Malays and Moi, or dark negro race. Coasts generally hold, and abound with some of the best harbours in the world. Products, rice, sugar, cinnamon, cardamoms, pepper, and other spices, indigo, dye-woods, iron-wood, teak, and other timber, varnish, gums, an inferior tea, bamboos, ivory, silk, copper, iron, and the precious metals. These articles, with edible birds' nests and pearls, form the princip. exports. Impts., manuf. silks, porcelain, drugs, fine teas, and household utensils from China (but the Chinese trade with Anam is much less than with Siam); spices, sandal wood, and tin from the Malay penins.; opium from India; cottons from Canton and Singapore, and a few Brit. coarse woollens, with serges, camlets, iron, and arms from Europe. The king is said to monopolise the legal trade, in which five square rigged ships are employed, on voyages to Canton, Batavia, and British India. In 1844 the imports from Anam, at Singapore, amounted in value to 177,606 dollars, and the exports thither to 229,413 dollars. Ch. cities and seats of trade, Hué, the cap., Ke-cho (Tonquin), Sai-gon, & Faifo. The govern. is an hered. milit. despotism; the central administration is under six mandarins, heads of bureaux; and the provinces are each under a mandarin of the first or military class. Standing army was, some years since, between 40,000 & 50,000 men, besides the royal guards & 800 elephants. Navy includes abt. 200 gun-boats, 100 galleys, & 500 smaller vessels,—a large force; but the people have a maritime taste, & excel most Asiatics in ship-building. The popular religion is Buddhism. Before the French revol., the gov. of Louis XVI. made great endeavours to establish French ascendancy in Anam; and by the efforts of the French residents, several of the cities were fortified in the European fashion, & European policy was introduced into the governmt.; but these incipient reforms have since become obsolete; a more recent attempt, on the part of the French, to gain an ascendancy, having also failed. The emperor sends presents, at stated periods, to the court of Peking, which affects to consider Anam tributary to China, & invests its successive rulers with their sovereignty.

ANDES (Span. Cordillera de los Andes), the great mountain system of S. America, extend. through 65° of lat., along its W. coast from Cape Horn to the Isthmus of Panama, with a breadth of from 40 to 400 m., forming along the highest part, a length of 4,360 m., & covering with its chains, plateaus, and declivities, nearly a sixth part of that continent. From its S. extrem. the main chain runs along the W. shore of Tierra del Fuego, & consists of rocky summits, rising in many places to 2,000 or 3,000 ft., the culminating point of this portion (Mt. Sarmiento), being 6,910 ft. above the sea. The Patagonian Andes which succeed those of the S. insular dist., run directly northward as far as lat. 42° S., flanked by rocky and mountainous isls. in the Pacific, that seem to have been disunited from the mainland by volcanic agency. The extreme height of the Andes in this division is 8,030 ft. The Andes of Chile, which follow, extend from lat. 42° to lat. 21° S., and some of their summits reach the height of 23,000 ft.; the chain is here about 80 m. across, & toward the ocean is flanked by extens. plains from 1,200 to 2,000 ft. above the sea level; from which the mountains rise with a very steep acclivity. There are several passes across this ridge, the most important is that of the great line of road between the city of Buenos Ayres & Valparaiso on the Pacific Ocean. The Bolivian Andes, which form the central and most elevated portion of the system, extend northward from lat. 21° to 14° S., presenting one immense mass of rocks, extending in length over 7 degs. of lat., and in breadth from 200 to 250 m., the more elevated summits of which, rise on the E. and W. edges of the plateau, from 13,000 to 23,000 ft. In this section, also, the chain (hitherto forming a single, undivided ridge), separates, about lat. 19° S., into 2 great longit. ridges, the E. called the Cordillera Real, & the W. the C. of the coast. These run parallel to each other, and bound the table-land of Desaguadero, elevated 13,000 ft. above the sea, extending 500 m. in length, and from 30 to 60 m in breadth along the top of the Andes, and enclosing the lake of Titicaca. N. of this, the Cordilleras re-unite in the mntn. knot of Cuzco. The Peruvian Andes, separated from the Pacific by a sandy desert, 1,200 m. broad, extend from lat. 14° to 5° S., & detach two eastern offsets, one of which runs N.W. between the Maranon and the Huallaga rivs., and the other between the Huallaga & the Ucayali. The main range, termed the Cordillera of the Coast, runs W.N.W. in a direction parallel to, & about 50 m. distant from the Pacific. The Andes of Quito commence at lat. 5° S., and run nearly due N. to the table-land of Quito, which is 200 m. long, 30 m. broad, elevated 9,600 ft. above the sea, and surrounded by the most magnif. series of volcanoes in the world. About lat. 1° N. is the mntn. knot of los Pastos, containing several active volcanoes. On the E. side, lat. 2° N. is the mntn. knot of Paramo, from which extend 3 separate chains.—I. that of Suma Paz, going N.E. from lat. 2° to lat. 9° N., and rising to an elev. of 9,000 ft.—II. the chain of Quindiu, N.N.E. between the Knots of Paramo & Antioquia —and III. the chain of Choco between the rivs. Cauca & Atrato. A low ridge extends on the W. of the Atrato, and gradually sinks as it approaches the Isthmus of Panama.

The Andes are composed partly of granite, gneiss, mica, and clay slate, but chiefly of greenstone, porphyry, and basalt, with limestone, red sandstone, and conglomerate. Salt and gypsum are also found, and seams of coal at a great elevation. The topaz, amethyst, and other gems are abundant. Volcanoes are numerous in the Chilean Andes, where there are no less than nineteen in a state of activity; and the mutns.

of Ecuador consist almost altogether of volcanic summits, either now or formerly in active ignition. Of these, the most dreaded is Cotopaxi. In some of its eruptions flames rise 3000 ft. above the edge of its crater, and the sound of its explosions is heard at a distance of 550 m. Its form is most regular and beautiful; the summit forming a perfect cone, covered with an enormous bed of snow. Earthquakes generally accompany the volcanic eruptions, and are felt over all the adjacent continent. No portion of the globe is subject to such frequent and destructive earthquakes as the countries embosomed within the range of the Andes, and those lying between them and the Pacific ocean. The cities and towns of Bogota, Quito, Riobamba, Callao, Copiapo, Valparaiso, and Concepcion, have all at different times been more or less devastated by their agency. The Andes are celebrated for their mineral riches,—producing gold and silver in large quantities, with platinum, mercury, copper, lead, tin, and iron. Humboldt estimated the annual product of the mines of the New world, at the commencement of the present century, at 43,500,000 dollars, about 8,700,000*l.* Mr Jacob calculates the total product of the Amer. mines, including those of Brazil, during the 20 years terminating in 1829, at 379,937,731 dollars, or 18,996,845 dol. yearly (3,599,369*l.* sterling). By the government returns for 1834, the amount of gold & silver coinage, & of silver bars, was as follows:—

Peru	-	-	-	-	L. 688,392.
Bolivia	-	-	-	-	480,921.
Mexico	-	-	-	-	2,408,000.

Total value, L.3,517,314.

These returns, however, do not express the accurate produce of the mines, as much smuggling takes place. The limit of perpetual snow in the Andes reaches the height of 18,300 ft. in the W. Cordillera of Chile; near the equator it is 15,000 ft., and in the Bolivian Andes (lat. 21° S.) 17,000 ft. above the sea. The potato is cultivated in the Andes at an elev. of 9,800 to 13,000 ft. Wheat grows luxuriantly at a height of 10,000 ft., & oats ripen in the vicinity of L. Titicaca, at an elev. of 12,795 ft. Glaciers are numerous in Tierra del Fuego, and on the W. coast of Patagonia. The following are the principal summits & passes of the Andes, arranged from S. to N., with elevations in English feet:—

Created a royal borough in 1140, and a city and Archbishop's see in 1471. A once splendid cathedral, the ruins of which still remain, is supposed to have been founded in 1159, and was destroyed at the Reformation, vigorously carried on here by John Knox. Near the Cathedral stood a priory and other religious houses. The university is the oldest in Scotland, founded 1411. St. Leonard's college was founded in 1512, St. Mary's in 1537, St. Salvator's in 1455. St. Leonard and St. Salvator, now united, has 8 professors, & 55 hrsaries. St. Mary's is the divinity college. This city was the scene of many of the most remark. political & religious events in the history of Scotland. It was also a place of considerable trade, but fell into decay. The Rev. Andrew Bell, a native of this city, founded the Madras college, which was built after his death in 1832. It is a school of general instruction, including classes on the Madras system of education, and has about 800 pupils. The castle of St Andrew's was built in the 12th cent., and stood upon a point of land projecting into the sea. Here James III. was born. The sea is making considerable encroachments on the shores along the bay. St Andrew's unites with Cupar, Crail, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, & Pittenweem in sending a member to parliament. APENNINES (Ital. APPENNINO), Apeninus Mons, a long chain of mntns. which detaches itself from the Maritime Alps, in about long. 9° E., having a general direction first from W. to E., nearly parallel with the Pennine and Leopontine Alps, from which it is separated by the valley of the Po. In about long. 12° E. the chain turns toward the S., & traverses the Italian peninsula throughout its entire length to the Strait of Messina, separating near the S. extremity so as to embrace the gulf of Tarentum. The princip. branch traverses the kgdm. of Naples, separating the waters which flow to the Mediterranean from those which fall into the Adriatic & the Ionian seas. The entire length of the chain is about 800 m. The Apennines often present rounded tops and a uniform crest, whence branches descend to the coasts, between which, valleys, such as that at the mouth of the Tiber, open into extensive plains. But the S. slope of that part of the chain which bounds the gulf of Genoa, is composed of escarpments which rise abruptly from the sea. Among the detached portions of the Apennines are the mntns. of Piombino in Tuscany, Mt. Albano near Rome, & Mt. Vesuvius near Naples. M. Bruguière proposes to distinguish the mntns. in Sicily by the name of the Insular Apennines. None of the summits attain the limit of perpetual snow, although snow lies on Monte Corno during 9 months in the year. The culminating point of the Apennines is the Monte Cavallo or Monte Corno, in the Gran Sasso d' Italia, between Abruzzo Ult. I. and II., 10,154 ft. The other principal summits are Mt. Cimone, in the N. Apennines, 6,976 ft., and Mt. Amaro, summit of the Monte Majella in the S. Apennines, 9,131 ft., but the chain in general is of much lower elev. The S.W. part of the chain is a vast volcanic region comprising Vesuvius, the only active volcano on the continent of Europe, and many thermal springs. On the N. is the volcanic mass of Vulture near Melfi. The constitution of the chain is chiefly calcareous, primary rocks are found only at the two extremities, in Piedmont & Calabria. It is poor in metals; iron occurs in small quantities, & extens. saliferous dépôts occur near Cosenza; but the celeb. marble of Carrara, Serravezza & Sienna constitutes the chief riches of the Apennines. Below 3,200 ft. in elev., the flanks of the princip. chain are covered with a varied vegetation, of which the orange, citron, olive, and palm form the lower zone; but forests are rare in the Apennines. Above 3,200 ft. the mntns. are generally arid & devoid of vegetation.

APS, Alba Augusta, a comm. & vill. of France, dep. Ardèche, 12 m. S. Privas. Formerly important, and has many Roman antiquities.

APSPHERON, a peninsula, Russian dom., Georgia, extends for 40 m. into the Caspian Sea, & terminates in Cape Apsheron, lat.  $40^{\circ} 12'$  N., lon.  $50^{\circ} 20'$  E. It forms the E. extremity of the Caucasian chain, and is of calcareous formation. Its soil is impregnated with sulphur & inflammable gas, and it is famous as the place of the sacred flame, so highly venerated by the fire worshippers of Asia. [ATRSNGA.] About 237,000 poods of black naphtha, and 864 do. of white naphtha, are obtained annually in this peninsula; besides 1,000 poods of saffron, 300 do. of madder, and 150,000 do. of salt. On its S. coast is the port of Baku.

APSLÉV (RIVER), East Australia, N. of the colony of New South Wales, rises near lat. 31° S., and lon. 151° 40' E., flows generally E.ward, and enters the ocean under the name of McLeay river, 40 m. N.E. Port Macquarrie.—(Strait), Timor Sea is between Melville and Bathurst islands, off the N. coast of Australia. Length 46 m., breadth varies from 1½ to 4 m.; and depth of channel from 8 to 24 fathoms. Shore on both sides low and bordered by a thick belt of mangroves. A British settlement, afterwards abandoned, was formed at Fort Douglas, on this strait, in 1824.

APT, Apta Julia, a comm. & town of France, dep. Vaucluse, cap. arrond., on l. b. of the Calavon, 29 m. E.S.E. Avignon. Pop. (1846) 4,377. It is enclosed by old walls, and has a curious cathedral, & many Roman antiquities, with manufs. of woollen and cotton stuffs, earthenware, and confectionary. It was embellished by Cæsar, whence its surname Julia.

APULIA, or PUGLIA, an anc. prov. of S. Italy, one of the princip. divis. of Great Greece, now forming the three Neapolitan provs. Capitanata, Bari, Otranto, and part of Basilicata. A portion of the territ. is still called La Puglia.

APURÉ, a riv. Columbia, and one of the chief tributaries of the Orinoco, rises in the Andes of New Granada, near lat. 7° N., and lon. 72° W., flows generally E.ward, and joins the Orinoco in lat. 7° 40' N., and lon. 66° 45' W. Affls., including the Portuguesa & Guario, are mostly from the N. On it are the towns Nutrias and San Fernando.—The Apurimac river, Peru, is a head stream of the Ucayale.

AQUAMBO, a country of Africa, Upper Guinea, E. of the river Volta, with a town of same name.

AQUAFIM, a marit. state of Africa, Upp. Guinea, in about lat. 6° N., and lon. 0°, having S. the Gulf of Guinea. Soil rather barren near the coast, but fertile inland. It is, however, very little cultivated, and the inhabs. live mostly on yams and dried fish. They have some domestic manufs., but most of the woven fabrics in use are of English manufacture, and are paid for in palm oil and gold dust.

AQUARA, a vill. of Naples, prov. Princip. Citra, 16½ m. S.S.E. Campagna. Pop. 2,030.

AQUILA, a fortfd. and episcop. city of Naples, cap. prov. Abruzzo Ult., on the Aterno, 58 m. N.E. Rome. Pop. 8,000. This is one of the best built and most commercial cities in the kgdm. It was much injured by earthquakes in 1688, 1703, and 1706, on its re-construction only 1 bastion of the anc. fortif. was preserved; it has manufs. of linens and 6 yearly fairs. Aquila was built by the emperor Frederick II., from the ruins of the ancient Amiternum, the birthplace of Sallust, some vestiges of which city are still traceable.

AQUILEJA, a town of Northern Italy, gov. Triest, circ. Gorizia, at the head of the Adriatic, 22 m. W.N.W. Triest. Pop. 1,600. In the time of the Romans, this was the centre of commerce betw. the N. and S. of Europe, its pop. was reckoned at 10,000 before it was taken and burned by Attila. It was then called the second Rome, and the Emperor Augustus often resided in it. Many remains of antiquity are found in its vicinity.

AQUINO, Aquinum, a town and bishop's see of Naples, prov. T. di Lavoro, 5 m. N.E. Pontecorvo. Pop. 1,100. Birth-pl. of Juvenal & of T. Aquinas.

ARABAT, a fortress of the Crimea, on the sea of Azov, 70 m. E.N.E. Simferopol. It was originally fortified by the Turks.

ARABGIN, a thriving town of Asiatic Turkey, pash. Sivas, cap. dist. near the Euphrates, and on the route betw. Trebizond and Aleppo, 135 m. S.S.W. Trebizond. It is enclosed by a forest of fruit-trees, and is reputed to have 6,000 houses, 4,800 being occupied by Mohammedans, & 1,200 by Armenians. The latter are mostly engaged in the manufs. of cotton goods from British yarn. In 1835, they had nearly 1,000 looms at work.

ARABIA (Arabistan of the Turks), the most westerly of the three great peninsulas of S. Asia, between lat. 12° 40' & 34° N., & lon. 32° 30' & 60° E. Bounded N. by Turkey in Asia, E. by the Persian gulf and the Gulf of Oman, S. by the Gulf of Oman and the Indian Ocean, and W. by the Red Sea. On the N.E. it is connected with Egypt by the isthmus of Suez, & is divided in two parts by the Tropic of Cancer. Length from N. to S. about 1,500 m.; average breadth, 800 m.; its area would therefore be 1,200,000 square m. Pop. estimated at from 7,000,000 to 12,000,000. Ptolemy subdivided the country into A. Petraea, "the stony;" A. Felix, "Araby the blest;" and Arabia Deserta; the first comprising its N.W. portion, with the peninsula of Sinai between the gulfs of Suez and Akabah; the second, the territory along the W. and S. coasts; and the last, all the rest of its extent; but this partition is unknown to the inhabs. and to Arab geographers. Its native subdivisions are the Bahr-el-Tour-Sinai (Desert of Mount Sinai), in the N.W.; the Hedjaz (Land of Pilgrimage), Tehama and Yemen, along the Red Sea; Hadramaut, skirting the Indian Ocean; Oman (comprising the Muscat dominions), at its E. extremity; El-Hassalacha, or Bahrein, on the Persian Gulf; and lastly, Nedjed, comprising all the centre of the peninsula. The great desert zone, which stretches through Africa and Asia, consisting of the Sahara, a large part of Egypt and of Persia, Beloochistan, W. Afghanistan, N.W. India, most part of Chinese Turkestan and Mongolia, comprises also the greater part of Arabia, on which account much of the country is unknown. Its centre, in so far as explored by Europeans, is found to be a table-land, attaining in some places an elev. of 8,000 feet, sloping N.E. from a mountain chain prolonged from the Syrian Lebanon down to the Strait of Bah-el-Mandeb, whence another chain extends N.E. parallel with the ocean as far as Oman. Granite, flanked by limestone, forms the basis of these mountains, which are in general from 3,000 to 4,000 feet high, but the peak of Jebelokkdar in Oman, is 6,000 feet in elevation. All N., from Hedjaz to the Euphrates, is a continuous plain of moving sands, and a similar region occupies most of the S. half of the peninsula; mountain ranges in various directions traverse the central plateau, and the S.E. coast is lined by mountains of 5,000 feet in elevation; the shores are generally bare and uninhabited, and a deficiency of water is almost universal; but wherever a small river irrigates the soil, there is a most luxuriant vegetation. The climate is the driest in the world; the dry season is prolonged during the entire year in the level parts; and the rainy season, which in general lasts from the middle of June to the end of September, and in Oman from November to the middle of February, occurs only in December and January in the N. deserts. The heat is excessive in the plains, but temperate in the mountainous regions of Yemen and Hadramaut, and the winters are rigorous in the elevated regions of Nedjed. The Simmoom or Samiel, the hot wind of the desert, blows from the interior towards the coast in all directions. Vegetable products comprise maize, wheat, barley, millet, indigo, tobacco, the finest coffee, cotton, sugar, spices, tamarinds, dates, and numerous other fruits, balm, acacia, and various gums, resins, and drugs. Some valuable woods are produced, but Arabia has no forest, properly so called. The horse, which has been carefully bred here for several thousand years, forms an important branch of traffic. The wild ass of the desert is renowned for size & strength. The camel is the principal beast of burden, and the breed of Oman is celebrated for its beauty and fleetness; oxen, sheep, goats, and buffaloes are the other domestic animals. Mineral products are little known, but understood to comprise the onyx, emerald, basalt, blue alabaster, iron, and silver. The inhabitants settled around the coast appear to have a distinct origin from the Bedwins or true Arabs, who are the traditionally reputed descendants of Ishmael, and wander with their flocks and herds, dwelling in tents, and subsisting partly by plunder. The Wahabees, who form a distinct sect of Mohammedans, occupy the interior of the country, having subjected a great portion of it to their dominion at the commencement of the present century. Their capital is at Der'ayyah. Agricultural processes are very rude, and manufs. perhaps at a lower ebb than in any other semi-civilized country. The Bedwin women weave hair tent-covers, and bags; and coarse linen and woollen fabrics, rude matchlocks, lance heads, and other arms, copper and tinned vessels, are made on the W. and S. coasts, mostly by foreigners. In Oman, silk and cotton turbans, sashes, woollen and hair cloaks, canvass, arms, earthen jars, and gunpowder, are made; but most other manufactured goods are obtained from abroad, in return for the native produce. In spite of the backward condition of the pop., the trade of Arabia is considerable, and large quantities of merchandise are brought by caravans and by sea from all the surrounding countries, partly for internal consumption, & partly for distribution among the numerous pilgrims and merchants who resort to the holy cities Mecca & Medina. Mocha and Loheia are centres of a large coffee trade. Muscat has lately risen to eminence as an entrepôt for the trade with India & the Persian Gulf, and dows or ships of a superior kind are built there, which occasionally perform voyages to India. Jiddah or Djidda, the port of Mecca, is the other principal commercial town. A part of Arabia is under Egyptian rule; other parts compose the imamat of Muscat and Yemen, the first-named of which is a dominion of some consequence. The rest of the country is shared among an uncertain number of petty states. The gov. of the Bedwins is strictly patriarchal in each of the numerous tribes. The religion of the country is Islamism, which had its origin here towards the end of the 6th century, replacing the Sabaism and Judaism which had previously been the prevailing forms of worship. The Arabic language, called vulgar, to distinguish it from that of the Koran, is used over all the N. of Africa, and extends even to the S.E. of Asia, being among the most widely spread on the globe. The literary Arabic is still used in the liturgy of all Mussulmans. It was long the language of the sciences, arts, and civilisation, and its literature is the richest of all the anc. nations of the East. Literature & the arts are now almost unknown to the present semi-barbarous race of inhabitants. For further details see Jomard, Histoire de l'Égypte, sous Moh. Aly, Paris, 1847, & McCulloch's Geog. Dict.

ARACAN, or ARRACAN, a British prov. of Further-India, presid. Bengal, extending along the E. side of the Bay of Bengal, betw. lat. 16° & 22° 30' N., & lon. 92° & 94° E., having E. the Burmese dom., from which it is separated by a high mntn. range, and N. the British dist., Chittagong. Area estim. at 16,500 sq. m. Pop. (1839) 247,765. Coast swampy and very unhealthy, but there are many good harbours, and large isls. ASIA, the largest of the great divisions of the globe, comprehends all the countries to the east of Europe and Northern Africa, and extends, with its islands, between lat. 10° S., and 78° N., and lon. 26° E. to 190° E. (170° W.) A great central mass of continent forms about four-fifths of the whole area, and from this several extensive peninsulas and headlands project on the E., S., & W., with many clusters of contiguous islands. Asia is closely connected with the other continents, being separated by no great sea distance from America on the N.E., and Australia on the S.E., connected with Africa by the isthmus of Suez on the S.W., and continuous with Europe on the W. by an extensive boundary line, formed by the Uralian and Caucasian mountains. Its whole area is supposed to amount to upwards of 16 millions of square miles, and its population to 626 millions. Central Asia is composed of two great elevated table lands, a higher and a lower, each descending by gradual slopes and terraces to the level lowlands, while those table lands themselves are traversed by numerous mountain chains and elevated ranges of country. The eastern system of these table lands comprehends the elevated districts of Tibet, and the great desert of Gobi, from 4,000 to 10,000 feet above the sea level, the western, the plateau of Iran (Persia), with a general elevation of 4,000 ft. Both these districts combined may occupy about two-fifths of the whole of Asia, the remainder is occupied partly by the terraces, by the intervention of which the elevated table lands gradually sink towards the lowland, and partly by the lowlands themselves. The length of the elevated regions, from the Black Sea and Persian Gulf on the W., to the Korean Coast on the E., is upwards of 5,500 m. The greatest breadth, from 1,800 to 2,000 m. on the N.E. of China, while in the W., in Beloochistan and Bucharia, it contracts to 700 miles. The mtns. of Taurus and Caucasus form the boundary of the plateau on the N.W.; Mt. Elbruz near the Caspian Sea, the Altai range in Siberia, and the Alpine region of Da-uria, on the N.E. The Himalaya mtns. form the S. boundary, and the Persian mtns. and Mt. Taurus the W. The most elevated portion of the Eastern Plateau is in Tibet, where it rises to the height of 10,000 to 14,000 ft. It then sinks gradually to the N. and N.W., forming a series of terraces, which terminate in the lowsteppes around L. Aral. It is through these sloping terraces, by which the eastern Plateau is every where intersected, that the great riv. systems descend to the lowlands bordering on the ocean. On the mountain ranges N. of the table land, four great rivs. take their rise—the Irtysh, the Yenesei, the Lena, & the Amur, draining a surface of country more extensive than that of Europe. Two great rivers take their rise in the Eastern range, the Hoang-Ho and the Yangtse-Kiang, which, flowing through China, discharge their waters into the Pacific Ocean. The principal rivers of S. Asia are the Cambodia, Iravaddy, and Menam; the Brahmaputra, Ganges, and Indus, taking their rise in the Himalaya mtns., and traversing by diverging routes the country known as India within the Ganges. The Western Plateau is much smaller in extent than the eastern, but being more contiguous to Europe, assimilates more in its character to that continent. The high table land of Iran extends from the Upper Indus through W. Asia to the shores of the Grecian Archipelago. Persia forms its centre; to the W. are the Turkish dominions, and E. Afghanistan. The centre is intersected by several extensive mountain ridges, through which are some important passes from the Highlands of Persia to the coast. Westward of Persia, the table land becomes more mountainous in the countries of Kurdistan, Azerbaijan, and Armenia; here the rivers Euphrates and Tigris have their source, which, flowing through Mesopotamia and anc. Babylonia, enter the Persian Gulf by one channel. The peninsula of Arabia forms a continuation of the Highlands of W. Asia. The Lowlands of Asia may be divided into, 1. Chinese Lowlands on the E., commencing at Pekin, and extending nearly to the tropic, enjoying a temperate climate and fertile soil; 2. the Indo-Chinese, comprehending Cambodia and Siam, a well-watered and good rice country; 3. Hindostan, bounded by the Ganges and Iodus, forming a great triangle; 4. Syria & Arabia, the southern part dry and desert, the northern watered by the Euphrates and Tigris; 5. the Northern Siberian, in extent more than half all the others, stretching along the Polar Sea from the Ural Mtns. to the Pacific Ocean, a cold and generally sterile region; 6. Bucharia, on the Caspian Sea and L. Aral, with a gravelly soil, ill-watered, covered with grass, without trees, & with only occasional patches of fertile land. The Mineral products of Asia are numerous, & have been known from remote antiquity. Precious stones are abundant. Amethysts, topazes, and rock-crystals are found in the Altai, Himalaya, and Ural mntns.; carnelians and agates in W. India; beryl and lapis lazuli near L. Baikal; sapphires and rubies, Ceylon isl.; diamonds in Decan, Borneo, and Ural mntns. Volcanic products are found near Mt. Taurus, in Armenia, W. Anatolia, and in Japan and Sunda isl.; steatite, asbestos, and kaolin or fine porcelain clay, in China and Japan; talc in Siberia; coals in Hindostan & China; rock salt in the Ural mntns., N. China, & Turkey; gold or gold-dust in various localities. In 1843 the mines of Siberia produced 58,867 lbs. troy of gold, estimated value 2,750,000*l*. Mercury in China and Japan. Copper and iron in Ural mntns., & lead in Da-Uria, China, Armenia. Fossil shells are found in great quantities at an elevation of 16,000 to 18,000 ft. in Tibet, mammalian remains in the lower Himalaya, & the alluvial soil of Siberia, is full of bones of extinct quadrupeds.

The vegetation of Asia varies with its different regions. N. of lat. 60° scarcely any vegetable products are seen except birches, mosses, and lichens. In S. Siberia, and indeed as far S. as the chain of the Himalaya & Hindoo-Koosh, the vegetation in a great measure resembles that of N. and Central Europe, though all the great table land of E. Asia is remarkably bare of timber. Ginseng and rhubarb are products peculiar to this region. In the cultivated plains of Bokhara and Cabool, grapes, melons, pears, figs, and other fruits common in Europe, grow to such perfection that they are exported in considerable quantities to Persia and Hindostan. N. of the Caucasus, the country is thinly covered with vegetable products, and those are of inferior quality; but immediately S. of that chain, the cedar, cypress, juniper, oak, and the fruits common to S. Europe, begin to flourish luxuriantly; and rice, cotton, indigo, sugar, tobacco, dates, are among the products of the fruitful provs. of Turkey and Persia. The region of Asia S. and E. of the Himalaya, comprising the Indian peninsula, with China-proper and the Asiatic Archipelago, is unrivalled for the number and richness of its vegetable products. These include the plantain, banyan, ebony, iron, rose and sandal-wood trees; bamboos, gums, varnishes, and dye-woods in immense variety; with the betel, bread-fruit & banana, guava, mango, mangosteen, & a multitude of other fruits; sugar, opium, cotton, indigo, and numerous valuable articles of culture. The teak-tree, tea, sago, camphor, cloves, mace, and nutmegs, are peculiar to this part of the globe. Wheat is raised at an elevation of 10,000 feet in the Himalaya mountains. The zoology of the N. of Asia partakes of the character of that of N. Europe. In the central and southern countries are found the elephant, rhinoceros, Bengal tiger, and many other formidable animals, with the camel, auroch, yak, musk-deer, argal, Tibet goat; and it is believed that all the domestic animals of Europe (the sheep perhaps excepted) have been originally derived from Asia. There seems to be this marked distinction between the ox, horse, ass, goat, hog, and other mammal tribes which are natives of Asia, and those which are indigenous in Africa or America,—that the former alone are capable of propagation and domestication in every climate. Asia has comparatively a less variety of birds and reptiles than of quadrupeds, but the cassowary, bustard, pheasant, domestic fowl, and a variety of other gallinaceous birds are abundant; & among reptiles, the Indian python, the cobra-de-capello or spectacle snake, with the gaviol, or crocodile of the Ganges, are formidable in the highest degree.

Asia is considered the cradle of the human race, from whence the various nations and tribes have issued to people the other parts of the world. The number of foreigners, who have migrated to & settled in Asia, is small compared to those who have left it. The number of Europeans in India may be estimated at 100,000, the descendants of the Cossacks settled in Siberia, 2 millions, European Greeks inhabiting Anatolia, 1½ million. The races inhabiting Asia may be divided into 1. The Semitic, including Syrians, Jews, Arabs, and the descendants of the ancient Chaldeans or Aramœans;—2. The Persian Kurds, Ossetes, Armenians, Georgians, Mingrelians;—3. The Turks, forming a numerous race of central Asia;—4. The Samoiedes, N. Asia;—5. The Mongols, Buriats, Kalmucks, Tungcooses, and other tribes in N.E. Asia;—5. The Japanese, Chinese;—6. The Malays, inhabiting Malaysia & the islands of the Eastern Archipelago. The political divisions of Asia include six empires, China, Russia, Britain, Persia, Turkey, Arabia. The British possessions are chiefly in India, or the peninsula within the Ganges. The Portuguese, whose settlements were formerly numerous, have preserved only Goa, Damaun, Macao, and a few others. The French possess Pondicherry, a settlement on the coast of Malabar, and two or three more. The Dutch occupy Java, Sumatra, the Moluccas, &c.

ASIA ISLES, a cluster of low & thickly wooded isls. in the Asiatic Archipelago, E. of Gilolo. Lat. 1° N.; lon. 131° 17' E.

ASIAGO, a town of Northern Italy, deleg. Vicenza, cap. of the distr. termed the "Seven Communes," inhabited by a race of German descent, 22 m. N. Vicenza. Pop. of the dist., 25,500; of the town, 4,670. It is celebrated for the manuf. of straw hats and all sorts of carpenter's work.

ASIA MINOR, or ANATOLIA, forms the western peninsula of Asia, extending between lat. 36° & 42° N., & lon. 26° & 40° E., having E. Armenia and Mesopotamia, S. Syria and the Mediterr., W. the Ægean Sea, and N. the Sea of Marmora and Black Sea. Area estimated at 269,000 sq. m.; & pop. at 4,000,000. Two mountain chains run nearly E. and W., the district between, forming an elevated table land studded with mntns., while the country interior to this plateau is watered on each side by short rivs. The Taurus mntn. chain trends E. to W. near its S. coast, rising frequently to 8,000 or 10,000 ft. in ht.; and near the N. coast runs the other chain, less continuous and lofty, but comprising Mts. Olympus, Ida, and Gargarus, famous in classic literature. On the N.E. are the mntn. ranges of Anti-Taurus; elev. of the highest, Arjish Tag, 13,000 ft. N. of these is the Euxine or Lazian range. Shores greatly indented; principal inlets, the gulf of Adalia and Makri on the S.; those of Syri, Kos, Scala-Nova, Smyrna, and Adramyti, on the W., and those of Ismid and Sinope, on the N. coast. Chief rivs. the Kizil-Irmak (anc. Halye), Yeshil-Irmak, and Sakaria (anc. Iris & Sangarius), flowing into the Black Sea; the Kodus, Grimaliki, and Mendere (anc. Hermus, Caicus, and Meander), into the Ægean; and the Sihun and Jyhoon (anc. Sarus & Pyrarnus), into the Mediterranean; and the Euphrates forming the E. frontier. There are numerous fresh and salt water lakes; Tuz-gol is the largest salt water l., and yields a great quantity of salt. The climate varies with the locality, the elevated regions being cold and humid, the plains warm and fertile. The eastern part of the country is composed of volcanic rocks, the W. of calcareous strata with tertiary fossils. The mines produce copper, silver, lead, iron, alum, nitre, and rock salt are also abundant. Rice, barley, maize, sugar, cotton, indigo, tobacco, opium, and most of the products of S. Europe flourish; and the mntns. in the N. abound with good timber. Other products are wool, silk, gall-nuts, skins, furs, cochineal, madder, sponge, meerschaum clay. Manufs., leather, carpets, cotton & woollen stuffs, & a few other articles. The pop. consists mostly of Turks and Greeks, with some Armenians and Jews, and wandering tribes of Kurds, &c. Asia-Minor is divided into the pashalics of Anatolia, Itshil, Karamania, Sivas, Marshah, and a part of Trebizond. Principal cities, Smyrna, Brusa, Trebizond, Kutayah, Angora, Koneh (anc. Iconium), and Kaisariyeh (anc. Cæsarea), with Scutari, opposite Constantinople. Smyrna, Trebizond, and Brusa, are the principal seats of commerce; but all around the coasts are numerous small ports, where fairs and markets for the produce of the inland districts are frequently held. This region was anciently the seat of the famous kingdoms of Troy and Lydia, and afterwards formed a proconsulship under the Romans. It produced Homer, Thales, Pythagoras, Herodotus, and many other of the most distinguished poets, philosophers, historians, and artists of antiquity; and ruins scattered over almost every portion of its surface, attest its former wealth & prosperity.

ASIATIC OR EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO, the largest collection of isls. on the globe, extending along the equator, from the S.E. coast of Asia to the W. of Australia, comprehending a space betw. lat. 11° S. and 19° N.; and lon. 95° to 135° E.; having the China Sea on the N., the Pacific on the E., and S. and W. the Indian Ocean. The numerous isls. may be arranged under 5 groups.

I. Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Madura, Banka, Billiton, & the W. and larger portion of Borneo. This includes the western and larger isls., where the soil is good; to which may be added the adjoining Malay peninsula. Rice is cultivated, as well as some of the aromatic spices, as pepper, and the inhabitants are the most civilized of the Archipelago.

2. Celebes, Sumbawa, Flores, Timor, Sandalwood Isl., and E. part of Borneo. This includes the central isls. where the soil is inferior. Rice not largely produced, and sago partly forms a substitute.
3. Ceram, Booro, Gillolo (Molucca I.), Timor-laut, Arrooe I., and Papua, the latter coming within the range of Australasia; this forms the eastern division, the climate & products of the soil of which differ from the two preceding. Aromatic plants, as the spices, characterize the Molucca isls. Sago is the chief article of food, and the inhabs. are inferior in civilisation.
4. Mindanao, Sooloo I., Palawan, and N.E. part of Borneo. This forms a central group N.E. of No. 2. Rice is produced, but sago forms the chief food. Spices of inferior quality. The natives are superior in civilisation to those in division 2.
5. Luzon, & all that portion of the Philippine isls. stretching from lat. 10° to 19° N. Soil and climate adapted for rice, tobacco, and sugar-cane, but not for spices. A different race of inhabs. from those of the other groups. These isls. lie within the range of the hurricanes.

The isls. of the Eastern Archipelago are all more or less of volcanic origin, & exhibit at the present time, active volcanoes in numerous localities. The older formations, however, are also found forming the basis of many of the islands. Mntn. ranges of considerable height, as well as isolated mntns. are very prevalent; the elev. extending from 5,000 to 15,000 ft. Extensive valleys intervene, and dense forests of stupendous trees, and a most luxuriant and varied vegetation cover the whole surface of the soil; no arid or barren deserts existing. In the older primary & secondary rocks, metalliferous ores are abundant. Gold is found in various places, especially in Borneo and Sumatra; tin mines in the isl. of Banca; silver, copper, & iron in other localities; diamonds are found in Borneo; sulphur is abundant, as also lignite, naphtha, asphaltum; coal is found in Luzon and other localities, and native salt is procured from springs in Java. The climate is tropical, the solar heat tempered, however, by the insular condition of the land, and by copious moisture. In the Western Isls. the thermometer ranges from 76° to 93° F. These isls. experience the atmospheric changes incident to the monsoons, and the N.E. isls. are within the range of the tropical hurricanes. A good soil, elevated temp., and genial moisture, produce a profuse and splendid vegetation. Palms, bamboos, and rattans grow universally; teak, ebony, sandal-wood, sassafras, areca, and resinous and gum-bearing trees in abundance. The clove, nutmeg, and various aromatic trees, abound in the Moluccas. Pepper, ginger, cubebs, and various spices, in Java and Sumatra. Cotton, tobacco, sugar, sweet potato, in the Philippines, and other islands. Flowers of the most splendid hues, mostly yellow and red, spring up in spontaneous abund.; & fruits, as the orange, lemon, shaddock, pomegran., pine-apple, guava, mango, durian, are very plentiful. The grains cultivated in the larger and more civilized isls., are maize, millet, pulses, and chiefly rice. Throughout the other isls., the amyloaceous pith of the sago palm (Metroxylon sago) is the chief food of the inhabs., forming, in this locality, a peculiarity in the mode of human subsistence not found in any other part of the world. Animals are no less abundant in this region than vegetation. The elephant is found in Sumatra, and the Malay peninsula adjoining. The tiger, panther, and other predacious animals, are not uncommon. The ox & buffalo, both large & of excellent breeds, are used in agriculture; deer and wild hogs abound, and the rhinoceros is not uncommon. Many species of the monkey tribe are found in various localities, and the oran-outang in Borneo. Birds of the most varied kinds and beautiful plumage fill the woods, as the argus pheasant, peacock, bird of paradise, & sevl. useful species of domestic fowls, & a species of swallow builds the edible nest so eagerly prized by the Chinese. Tortoises are numerous on the eastern shores, & fish, includg. the pomfret, calcap, sole, abound in the seas. The Holothuria, or sea slug, another Chinese luxury, and oysters, and numerous shell-fish, are also common. The lac insect exists in most of the forests, and honey bees are numerous, but have not been domesticated. Two distinct races of men inhabit this region. The Malay, forming the great bulk of the pop., especially of the W. isls., is of a light brown or olive complexion, with long straight hair, short stature, & robust body, round face, and small features. Strong & active in habits, in many communities considerably advanced in civilisation; in other situations, roving and restless pirates,—and differing also in physical form in many of the isls. The Papuan or black race have negro features and curly hair, small stature, and spare and puny form. These are in a ruder state, are less susceptible of civilisation, and in many of the islands inhabit the interior of the country in a savage state. Many Chinese emigrants have settled in Borneo and other isls., and a small proportion of Hindoos. The Hindoo faith is professed by a portion of the native races, but Mohammedanism is the prevailing religion. Christianity has been partially introduced into the Europ. settlements. The Dutch possess Java, Madura, Amboyna, Banda, Timor, and part of Sumatra, and have some settlements in Borneo, Celebes, &c. The Philippines belong to Spain. Singapore is a British station for trade and shipping; & Labuan, on the N.W. of Borneo, has recently been estab. for the same purposes. The exports to China are spices, scented wood, ebony, ivory, horns, tortoise shell, sharks' fins, edible bird nests, trepang, gold dust, drugs, & European woollens & cottons: India, spices, gold, silver & tin, amounting in 1838 to 542,760*l.* The exports to Europe, America, and Cape of Good Hope, are greatly on the increase. The chief imports, are black tea, coarse porcelain, wrought iron, cottons, silks, shoes, umbrellas from China; cotton cloths, and chintzes from India; cottons, woollens, saddlery, and other manufactured goods from England. Particular details will be found under JAWA, SUMATRA, BANDA, MOLUCCAS, PHILIPPINES.

It has an old castle, and fortifs. in ruins, a Gothic cathed., convents, manufs. of linen cloth and yarn, and some Roman antiqs. Near it is the lake of Sanabria, with the insular castle of the Counts of Benavente.

ASTORIA (FORT-GEORGE), a station of the Oregon territory, dom. of the U. States, on the S. side of the Columbia river, near its mouth in the Pacific. Previously to its destruction by fire in 1821, it was a bastioned stockade, mounting several cannon, and enclosing various workshops; but it lately consisted only of a few log dwellings, occupied by Hudson Bay traders.

ASTRABAD, a city of N. Persia, cap. prov. of same name, situated near the S.E. corner of the Caspian Sea & Astrabad Bay. Lat. 36° 55' N., lon. 54° 31' E. Pop. uncertain; in 1831 it had been visited by the plague or cholera, and had not more than 4,000 inhabs. It is enclosed by a dry ditch and mud wall, 2 or 3 m. in circ., and is built mostly of wood. The town is pretty well drained and paved; but its few caravanseras & bazaars are ill supplied with goods, and its trade is confined to exchanges of horses, sheep, felt, & woollen stuffs brought hither by the Turkomans, for cotton, silk, and woollen fabrics, copper & iron wares, tobacco, &c., received by way of the Caspian.

ASTRAKHAN, or ASTRACAN, a gov. and administrative prov. of Russia, betw. lat. 45° and 49° 50' N., and lon. 43° 30' and 51° E., lying along the N.W. coast of the Caspian Sea, having E., N. and W. the gov. Orenburg, Saratov, & the country of the Don-Cossacks, S. and S.W. the Caucasus and the Caspian Sea. Area 50,000 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 284,400. The climate is excessive; the mean annual temp. 48° Fahr., that of summer 70°, and winter 13°. The Volga divides the prov. into two nearly equal parts, which are mostly mere sandy deserts; the delta & banks of the rivers being the only productive dists., and there the fruits of S. climates are raised. The cultivation of the vine was introduced at the commencement of the 17th cent., & magnificent grapes are raised in the vicinity of Astrakhan. Very little corn is sown, and the produce is much below the wants of the pop. The rearing of horses, cattle, and sheep, sturgeon fishing, and procuring salt in the marshes of the Steppes, are the chief branches of industry. The ann. value of the sturgeon taken in the Volga is estimated at from 2 to 3 mill. rubles; and above 30,000 barrels of caviar have been exported from Astrakhan in a single year. The pop. comprises besides Russians, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Kirghis, Bokharese, Persians, & Hindoos. The gov. is divided into 4 circles; its cap., Astrakhan, is the only place of importance.

ASTRAKHAN, a city of S. Russia, cap. gov. of same name, formerly cap. of a Tartar kgd., built on one of the isls. formed by the Volga, at its embouch. in the Caspian Sea. Lat. 46° 27' N.; lon. 48° 6' E. Pop. (1842) 45,703. It consists of a citadel called the Kremlin, the city-proper, and the suburbs. It has numerous churches, includ. the cathed. built by Peter the Great. The houses are almost entirely built of wood, and the streets are irregular, muddy, and unpaved. Its chief educational establishments are an ecclesiastical seminary, a gymnasium, and a botanic garden. Astrakhan is the seat of a Russ. archbhp., an Armenian bishop, and an admiralty for the wood-yards at the mouth of the Volga, as well as a station for the fisheries of the riv. From its favorable position, communicating with the richest parts of the emp., and with the principal ports in the Caspian Sea, this city has become the entrepôt between Russia, Persia, and India. It is a'so disting. for its industry; the chief branches of manuf. are cotton, silk, leather, and shagreen. Value of imports at Astrakhan in 1831, 96,713*l.*; of exports, 96,973*l.* In 1839 the value of the goods imported from the interior of Russia amounted to 6,238,877 paper rubles.

It consists mostly of one long street, with a church, chapel, and sessions-house, a large school, and a widows' alms-house, supported by the Earl of Darnley, chief proprietor. Petty sessions alternate Thursdays. Mkts. Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs 10 times annually.

ATHELINGTON, or ALLINGTON, a pa. of Engl., co. Suffolk, 4 m. S.E. Eye. Area 980 ac. Pop. 111.

ATHELNEY (ISLE OF), a small tract of about 100 ac. in England, co. Somerset, 7 m. S.E. Bridgewater, and formerly an isl. at the junction of the Tone and Parrot rivers. Here Alfred the Great found a refuge during a Danish invasion, and founded an abbey, about the year 888.

ATHELSTANEFORD, a pa. of Scotland, co. and 3½ m. N.E. Haddington. Area about 4,000 ac., nearly all arable. Pop. 991. The tragedy of Douglas was written by Home while incumbent of this parish.

ATHENRY, a town and pa. of Ireland, Connaught, cap. barony, co. and 13 m. E. Galway. Area of pa. 24,952 ac. Pop. 5,988; of town, 1,236. It is poor and dull, but is one of the oldest towns in the co., and parts of its anc. walls, gates, and castles, and of a Dominican monastery, founded in the reign of king John, are still traceable.

ATHENS, Athene, the cap. of the kingdom of Greece, or Hellas, and of the gov. of Attica, is situated in a small plain on the N.W. side of the Gulf of Egina, betw. the rivers Ilissus E., & Cephissus W., 5 m. from its harbour, the Piræus. Lat. of the Parthenon 37° 58' 8" N., lon. 23° 43' 54" E. Pop. (1845), 27,800, incl. garrison of 1,500 men. It is the resid. of the sovereign, the seat of a university, and supreme courts of the Archbishop of Attica. The Acropolis, or anc. centre of Athens, on which most of its noblest monuments are placed, is an isol. rocky height, rising 150 feet above the adjacent plain, and 1,188 feet above the level of the sea. Its summit is enclosed by walls 2,330 yards in circuit. The mod. city is built mostly on its W. and N. sides, in which directions many new thoroughfares have been laid out, the principal being Minerva, Æolus, Hermes, and Market Streets. Since the establishment of the seat of gov. here in 1835, the old walls, which during the Turkish rule surrounded Athens, have been taken down, and well-built houses are springing up on every side. The new palace, built between 1836 and 1843, at the foot of Mount Lycabettus, and about a ½ m. from the centre of the city, is a quadrangular building, 300 feet in length by 280 in breadth, with two internal courts, a portico of Pentelic marble, and richly decorated apartments. In front is a square, in which the bloodless revolution of Sept. 15th, 1844, was enacted. The university (founded 1836), is the finest mod. building, and contains an anatomical theatre, & a library of 28,000 volumes, with 34 professors and teachers, and (in 1845) 195 students. There is besides, a gymnasium, with upwards of 500 pupils, a military and an ecclesiastical academy, polytechnic, American-missionary, infant, and Lancastrian, schools, a seminary for teachers, a botanic garden, and society of natural history. The cathedral is a handsome Byzantine structure, with a mod. steeple. Other chief mod. edifices are the barracks, civil and military hospitals, a new cathedral in progress of construction, an English chapel, Protestant & Greek cemeteries, royal mint, chamb. of representatives, theatre & observatory. Athens has modern shops, hotels, lodging-houses, reading-rooms, and baths; but house-rent is exorbitant, and most necessaries are dear. Its manufs. are insignificant, the chief being walking-sticks and smoking-tubes made from the blackthorn of Parnassus and other classic spots. A good road now connects Athens with the Piræus (which see, for a notice of its foreign trade). Athens is reputed to have been founded by Cecrops, b. c. 1336; it fell to Rome, b. c. 86, since then it has belonged successively to Goths, Byzantines, Burgundians, Franks, Catalans, Florentines, Venetians, and Turks. Principal antiquities the Acropolis or anc. citadel surmounted by the Parthenon, an edifice of white marble, 228 feet in length by 100 feet in breadth, and still tolerably perfect; the Erechtheum, a building 90 feet in length; remains of the Temple of the Wingless Victory, recently restored in a judicious manner by the gov.; the Propylæa, or grand entrance in front of the foregoing temples; and the theatre of Herodes Atticus at the S.W. angle of the Acropolis. N. of the Areopagus is the Temple of Theseus, one of the most perfect monuments of anc. Athens, having 34 remaining Doric columns outside, and containing a rich museum of antiquities. Areopagus or Mars' Hill, where St Paul addressed the Athenians, the Pnyx, where popular meetings were held, the Eleusinium, the prison of Socrates, and Tower of the Winds, vestiges of the Temple and Theatre of Bacchus, the Grotto of Apollo and Pan. Outside of the city, 16 Corinthian columns, 60 feet in height, on a raised platform, remain of the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, and near the Ilissus, the Stadium or ancient race-course is still traceable. Athens became the seat of the Greek gov. (removed hither from Nauplia), in 1835. For details as to the present condition of Athens, see Strong's Greece as a Kingdom, 1842; Murray's Handbook for Malta, Greece, &c., Ed. 1845; and M'Culloch's Geogr. Dict.

ATHOS, MOUNT, called Agion Oros, Monte Santo, or the holy mntn. by the modern Greeks, a celeb. mntn. of Greece, at the extremity of the penis. of Chalcis, 80 m. S.E. Salonica, culm. point 6,778 ft. in elevation. Lat.  $40^{\circ} 16' N.$ ; lon.  $24^{\circ} 10' E.$

Previous to the late Greek insurrection the flanks of this mntn. were occupied by several villages, and 22 convents, besides 500 chapels, cells and grottoes, which served as the habitation of more than 4,000 monks; those called hermits lived in caves. In the intervals of their religious duties, these monks were employed in preparing the soil, cultivating vines and olives, and rearing many bees, which enabled them to export annually a great quantity of wax. They also made numerous images and other objects in wood, which were shipped at the port of Alvara, a fortified vill. on the E. side of the mntn., inhab. by 500 monks. This was the seat of the first ecclesiastical seminary of the Greek church, & its most celebrated theological school; here also was preserved the remains of the famous libraries which furnished to learned Europe the MSS. of so many master-pieces of anc. Greek literature. The ancient geographers assigned an extraordinary elev. to Mt. Athos, and asserted that the sun was visible from its summit 3 hours earlier than on the shores of the Ægean Sea. Vestiges of the canal cut by Xerxes, to avoid the dangers of navigating the promontory, have recently been discovered.

ATHY (Athlegar, "the western ford"), a mkt. town of Ireland, and the largest in the co. Kildare, Leinster, on the Barrow, here crossed by a bridge, and on an arm of the Grand Canal, 33½ m. S. ATLANTIC OCEAN, Atlantiscus Oceanus, one of the five great hydrographical divisions of the globe, occupies an immense longitudinal valley, and extends from the Arctic circle on the N. to the Antarctic circle on the S., bounded W. by the coast of America to Cape Horn, and thence by a line continued on the same meridian to the Antarctic circle, and E. by the shores of Europe & Africa to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence prolonged on the meridian of Cape Agulhas till it meets the Antarctic circle. Its extreme breadth is about 5,000 m., and its area is computed at 25,000,000 sq. m. It is naturally divided into three portions; 1st, the N.; 2d, the S.; and 3d, the interportial Atlantic. The North Sea, or German Ocean, the Caribbean Sea and the Irish Sea, form portions of the Atlantic, but the Baltic and the Mediterranean, which communicate with the N. Sea by narrow channels, are properly considered, separate seas. The principal gulfs of the Atlantic are, in Europe, the Bay of Biscay, or Golfe de Gascogne, in Africa the Gulf of Guinea, in America, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The chief islands are, in Europe, the British Isles and Iceland, in Africa, the Açores, Madeira, and Canary islands, and the Archipelago of the Gulf of Guinea, in America, the Antilles, Newfoundland, and the islands of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Atlantic, with its branches, drains nearly the whole of Europe W. of the basin of the Volga; all N. America E. of the Rocky Mountains and the mountains of Mexico; and the whole of S. America E. of the Andes. Its chief affluents are in Europe, the Rhine, Loire, and Tagus; in Africa, the Senegal, Niger, and Congo; and in America, the St. Lawrence, Mississippi, Orinoco, Amazon, and La Plata. The bed of the Atlantic is very unequal in elevation, in some places rising in immense sand banks to within a few fathoms of the surface, and in others sinking to unfathomable depths. The most extensive banks are those of Newfoundland, the Dogger bank in the German Ocean, and the Agulhas bank off the S. point of Africa. The minimum depth on the bank of Newfoundland, is 60 feet. The German Ocean varies in depth from 66 to 500 feet. In many places the Atlantic is upwards of 15,000 feet deep, and in lat. 15° 3' S., lon. 23° 14' W. (15° E. the coast of Brazil), Sir James Ross had no soundings with a line of 4,600 fathoms (27,600 feet, or nearly 5½ miles).

The trade winds blow regularly in the inter-tropical portion of the Atlantic; beyond these limits the winds are variable. From the prevalence of S. W. winds in the N. Atlantic, the voyage from Europe to America, on an average of six years sailing between Liverpool and New York, requires 40 days, while the return voyage is performed in 23 days. The principal currents of the Atlantic are, the Equatorial current, which flows from the coast of Africa to the Caribbean Sea, with a velocity of from 30 to 70 miles a day, and the Gulf Stream which, leaving the Gulf of Mexico, flows through the strait of Florida, with a velocity of 80 m. a-day, and a temperature of 86° Fahr., and extends with a gradually decreasing velocity and diminished temperature to the Açores. Immense numbers of fish are found in the Atlantic, and herring and cod-fishing are important branches of industry in northern Europe. A great part of the surface of the Atlantic between lat. 16° and 45° N., and lon. 35° & 75° W., is covered with a species of weed (Fucus natans) of a beautiful green colour, from which circumstance it is called the Sargaço Sea—the sea of duck-weed, or the grassy sea.

In the higher latitudes of the N. & S. Atlantic, navig. is impeded by immense icebergs, which are floated from the polar regions, and although these are generally melted before reaching the frequented parts of the ocean, they have occasionally been met with as far S. as lat. 40° 45' in the N. Atlantic, and in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope in the S. Atlantic Ocean. For extensive information on the navigation & currents of the Atlantic Ocean, see Johnston's Physical Atlas, Hydrog. Divis., No. 1.

ATLAS, a celebrated but little known mountain system of N. Africa, including all the heights in the Barbary states, as well as those which are dispersed through the region of Sahara. The principal chain appears to extend from near Cape Nun, on the Atlantic, to the E. of the great Syrtis in Tripoli, traversing the Empire of Morocco, the colony of Algeria, and the regency of Tunis. The highest known points of the system are situated in Morocco, E. of the capital, and S. of the town of Fez, and the chain appears to diminish in elevation as it extends towards the E. Several secondary chains detach themselves from the main system, and extend in different directions, one of which terminates at the strait of Gibraltar; these secondary chains appear to be connected by intermediary mntns. which traverse Algiers and Tunis. The name Little Atlas is applied to the secondary range of the country of Soas, to distinguish it from the Great Atlas which is confined to the elev. mntns. of Morocco. To the S. of Tripoli several low ranges extend from the principal chain into the Sahara & the desert of Libya. The highest points, proceeding from W. to E., are estimated thus, Morocco, 12,789 ft.; Algeria, 7,673 ft.; Tunis, 4,476 ft.; Tripoli, 3,200 ft. The lion & panther inhabit the wooded regions of Mt. Atlas, but do not visit the desert. Snow lies for several weeks in winter on many of the higher ranges of Atlas, & it is seldom absent from the summit of Miltsin, lat. 31° 12' N., 27 m. S.E. Morocco, which is ascertained to be 11,400 feet in elevation. The Atlas and its ramifications inclose many valleys of luxuriant fertility, & its flanks are clothed with dense forests of pine (Æneid, iv. 250), oak, cork, white poplar, wild olive, &c. In so far as has yet been ascertained, its composition is chiefly calcareous; copper, iron, lead, antimony, and rock salt, are abundant in it, but few mines are wrought to advantage. This mntn. chain figures prominently in the mythology of the ancients as being snpp. to sustain the heavens! (See Pomponius Mela, iii., sect. 10; see also Ovid Metamorph. lib. iv., sect. 8.)

AUSTRALASIA (SOUTH ASIA), a division of the globe forming a part of Oceania, extending between the equator and lat. 47° S., consisting of the continent of Australia, Tasmania (Van Diemen's Land), New Zealand, and those parts of the Eastern Archipelago and Polynesia, between lon. 130° and 170° E., viz., Papua, the Arru isls., Timor-Lant, New Britain, New Ireland, New Caledonia, and the Admiralty, Salomon, New Hebrides, and Q. Charlotte's isls. Australasia is called Mélanésie by the French geographers on account of its inhabitants being chiefly blacks. [POLYNESIA, ASIATIC ARCHIPELAGO.]

AUSTRALIA, New Holland, a vast extent of land composing the main portion of Australasia, and lying S. of the Asiatic Archipelago, betw. lat. 10° and 39° S., and lon. 113° and 154° E.; having W. the Indian O.; E. the Pacific O.; N. the Sea of Timor, and Torres Strait, separating it from Timor, Papua, &c.; and S. Bass' Strait dividing it from Tasmania (Van Diemen's Land). Length E. to W. 2,500 m.; greatest breadth about 1,800 m. Area estimated at 3 million sq. m. Pop. of British colonies including Tasmania and Norfolk isl., about 250,000. The aboriginal pop. in the vicinity of the British settlements are rapidly on the decrease. Their numbers are estimated at 15,000 to 20,000. There are no data for the total aboriginal pop. of the country, which has been vaguely estimated at 300,000. Australia, like the continents of Africa and S. America, is but little indented with arms of the ocean, and presents no wide estuaries of rivs. The principal indentations are the Gulf of Carpentaria,—a considerable sea,—& Cambridge gulf on the N.; Halifax & Moreton bays on the E.; Port Philip, the Gulf of St Vincent, & Spencer gulf on the S.; & Shark bay, with a few others on the W. coast. Botany-bay, & Jervis' bay are inlets of small size, many of which are met with; and some of these, with the estuaries of the larger rivers, afford tolerable shelter; though, upon the whole, the coasts of Australia are deficient in good harbours. Only the S.E. part, with comparatively small sections in the W. and S., and an inconsiderable tract in the N., near Port Essington, have been yet thoroughly explored. Some useful expeditions have been conducted by Mr Eyre, along the coast of the Gt. Australian Bight, and by Gov. Grey in the S.; and more recently Dr Leichard and party have traversed the country betw. Moreton bay and Port Essington: while Sir T. Mitchell, in addition to his former explorations, has also penetrated through a part of the interior of Tropical Australia; but much of the interior is still a terra incognita, & we can only specify some features of its best known regions. In the S.E. a succession of mtn. ranges stretches from Gipps' land to lat. 26° S., at a distance from the coast varying generally from 50 to 100 m. The Australian Alps, or Warragong mtns., belong to this chain, and are constantly covered with snow; Mt. York (Blue mtns.) rises to 3,292 feet; and the Liverpool range, within the colony of New South Wales, reaches elevations of between 6,000 and 7,000 feet. The resemblance of the geological formations of these mountains, to those of the Ural, led Sir R. I. Murchison, in 1845, to foretell the existence of gold in the Australian Cordillera; and, in February 1851, Mr Hargreaves discovered extensive diggings in the districts of Bathurst and Wellington, New South Wales. Since that time, gold has been found in various and wide spread localities in the province of Victoria. The only river system of the interior hitherto explored, is that of the Murray, which is swelled by the Darling, Castlereagh, Peel, Macquarrie, Bogan, Lachlan, and Murrumbidgee rivers, its basin being known to extend through at least 10° of latitude, and 13° of longitude, and probably comprises a much greater extent. Other principal rivers are the Hunter, Hawkesbury, Shoalhaven, debouching on the E.; Blackwood and Glenelg on the S.; Swan and Canning on the W.; and Victoria, Adelaide, Liverpool, and Alligator, on the N. coast; but few serve to facilitate internal navigation. Princip. lakes are those of Victoria and Torrens in S. Australia; the latter, which appears to be merely a salt marsh in the dry season, has a remarkable serpentine form; but its entire extent has not yet been determined. It was conjectured that an inland sea occupied a considerable part of the unexplored interior, but hitherto no facts have transpired to confirm this opinion. Soil very various; a large part of the surface is occupied by extensive sandy deserts; elsewhere fine pasture and woodlands are met with; but it is remarkable that the best soil is on the hill slopes, the lowlands and valleys being commonly sterile, except in the N., where there is a fine alluvial plain country. A third part of the continent lies within the torrid, and the rest in the S. temp. zone. The climate is peculiar, and subject to great vicissitudes of temperature. The N. half of the country being mostly within the tropics and the range of the monsoons, is subject in summer (between November and April), to heavy rains, which, however, are very irregular in their occurrence, and last only for a few hours daily. In other parts of Australia, years of complete drought occasionally occur, followed by years of flood; but here the hot is also in general the dry season,—a circumstance favourable to health. The N.E. winds blowing over the sandy deserts of the interior are dry and hot, raising the therm. to 80° and 110° Fahr. On the other hand, the S.E. winds are often very cold, & frost sometimes happens in the lowlands even in June. Granite, sandstone, limestone, coal, & slates, are the chief mineral products, and rich ores of copper and lead have been recently discovered. Of 5,710 plants discovered in Australia, 5,440 are peculiar to this continent. Ferns, nettles, and grasses, some of gigantic size, hard timber, gum and resin trees, with palms, myrtles, cedars, pines, prickly shrubs, and a multitude of odoriferous plants & grasses, are the chief vegetable products; but it is remarkable that there are, with one or two exceptions, no indigenous fruits. Timber in general is of inferior quality. Maize, wheat, flax, tobacco, indigo, vines, olives, and in some parts sugar and cotton are successfully raised; but sheep-farming is the most flourishing branch of pastoral economy, & it is principally as a wool-growing country that Australia is rising into commercial importance. The indigenous quadrupeds hitherto discovered comprise 58 species, of which 46, including the kangaroo, wombat, and other pouched animals, are peculiar to Australia and its adjacent islands. The singular ornithorhynchus paradoxus is an animal found here only; and it may be remarked that in many particulars nature here assumes a form unparalleled in other parts of the globe. The native Australians are viewed by many as a distinct variety of the human race; and, certainly, their numerous dialects have no discovered affinity with any other language. Their skin is of an earthy black, hair straight, forehead low and full, nose broad, lips thick, stature short, frame slight, and more adapted to feats of agility than of strength. They live in roving tribes; and, though not deficient in intellect, are in their habits among the lowest in the scale of humanity—many tribes going completely naked, practising cannibalism, and having scarcely any notions of a Deity, or of social arts and order. They are not, however, intractable, devoid of generosity, or ignorant of the rights of marriage and of property. The frequent violation of these rights is, in fact, the occasion of constant wars among them, which, together with polygamy, incest, infanticide, scarcity of food, and the usual results of the contact of savages with whites, appear to be producing the gradual extinction of the race. Their numbers in and near the European settlements are not supposed to exceed many thousands; and the comparative scarcity of water, which has hitherto mainly prevented Europeans penetrating far into the interior of this continent, suggests a doubt as to its capability of supporting any large uncivilized population. The Dutch or the Spaniards, about the beginning of the 17th century, were the earliest European discoverers of Australia, though little was known of it until Dampier, Wallis, and afterwards Cook, explored its various coasts. The favourable report of it by the latter was followed by the first British settlement at Port Jackson in 1788. The name of New Holland given by the Dutch to the N. western coasts, first discovered by them, and subsequently extended to the whole of the mainland, is now supplanted by the more appropriate name of Australia. The British settlement of New S. Wales, or Sydney, was made in 1788. The settlement of Western Australia, or Swan River, was established in 1829. South Australia, established in 1834, extends along the coast from Fowler's Bay in the W., to beyond Cape Northumberland, or from lon. 132° to 141° E., of which Adelaide is the capital. Australia Felix, or Victoria, chief town, Melbourne, established in 1837, was formerly a dependency of New South Wales. North Australia was colonised in 1838. Australind, on the western coast, about 80 miles south of Swan River, was established in 1841.

AUSTRIA (ARCHDUCHY OF), the central prov. and nucleus of the Austrian empire, and seat of its cap., comprised (including Salzburg) betw. lat. 47° and 49° N., and lon. 12° 10' and 17° E., having N. Bohemia and Moravia, E. Hungary, S. Styria, Carinthia, & the Tyrol, and W. the Tyrol and Bavaria. Area 15,052 square m. Pop. (1842) 2,227,524; viz. 1,417,783, in Lower Austria (including Vienna), and 809,741 in Upper Austria. The Noric Alps, which form its S. boundary, next to Styria, extend their centres to the banks of the Danube, which traverses the province from W. to E.; the river Inn forms its N.W., and the March part of its E. frontier. It has numerous mountain lakes, and highly picturesque scenery. Forests and vineyards extensive. It is fertile, and admirably cultivated. Wheat, oats, and barley are raised, and it has been estimated that 25 mill. gallons of wine are made here annually. Its mineral products are highly important, and comprise gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, arsenic, alum, coal, and graphite. The weaving and spinning of flax, cotton, and wool are the main branches of manufg. industry. This prov. is divided by the river Enns into the govts. of Upper and Lower Austria (Land Ober and Unter der Enns). Lower Austria is subdivided into 4 circles, I. Lower Wienerwald, cap. Vienna; II. Upper Wienerwald, cap. St Pölten; III. Lower Manhartsberg, cap. Korneuburg; IV. Upp. Manhartsberg, cap. Krems; and the municipal dist. of Vienna. The regency of Lower Austria has its seat at Vienna, and is charged with the civil administ. of the prov. Upper Austria is subdivided into 5 circles, I. Mühl, cap. Linz; II. Traun, cap. Steyer; III. Hausriik, cap. Wels; IV. Inn, cap. Ried; V. Salzburg, cap. Salzburg; and the regency is established at Linz. The military affairs of the archd. are directed by the military commandant of Vienna, who has under him the milit. comm. of Linz. After Vienna, the chief cities are Linz, Wiener-Neustadt, and Salzburg.

AUSTRIA (CIRCLE OF), an old subdiv. of Germany, which comprised Austria-Proper, or Lower Austria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, and the Tyrol, bounded N. by Moravia, Bohemia, and the circles of Bavaria and Swabia; W. Switzerland; S. Lombardy and Istria; and E. Croatia, and Hungary,—most of which territories are now included in the Austrian empire.

AUSTRIA, EMPIRE OF (Germ. Oesterreichische Kaiserthum, Fr. Empire d'Autriche), a state of Central Europe, cap. Wien (Vienna), situated chiefly between lat. 45° and 51° 2' N. (but extending in Dalmatia to lat. 42° 9' N.), and lon. 8° 35' & 26° 35' E., bounded N. by Russia, Prussia, Saxony, & Bavaria; S. by Parma, Modena, the Pontif. States, the Adriatic, and the Ottoman Emp.; W. by Lichtenstein, Switzerland, and the Sardinian States; and E. by the Russian Empire. Area 257,830 sq. miles. Pop. in 1846, 38,000,000. The princip. part of the territory presents the form of an oblong square, parallel with the equator lengthwise, and its centre is indicated, nearly, by the position of Pesth, on the Danube. 3 great mtn. systems cover the Emp. with their ramifications, the Alps in the S.W., the Bohemian and Moravian mtns. in the N.W., and the Carpathians, forming a great curve, the one extremity of which abuts on the Danube at Presburg in the N.W., and the other at Or sova in the S.E. The most elev. summits are in the Alps of Tyrol, where the Ortlerspitz attains the height of 12,779 ft., next the Lomnitzerspitz in the Carpathians, 8,861 ft., and 3d the Schneekoppe in the Riesen Gebirge, the culminating point of the mtns. of Bohemia and Moravia, 5,275 ft. The most mntnous countries are the Tyrol, Salzburg, Upper Styria, the W. part of Upper Carinthia, & the E. part of Transylvania. Austria contains many extensive plains, remarkable for their uniform level, the principal of these are the plains of Lower Austria, on both sides of the Danube, the plains of Hungary, the plain of Slavonia, and that of the Po, the greater part of which belongs to the Emp. Austria is most abundantly supplied with water, nearly all of which is collected into 6 great rivers, viz., the Danube & the Dniester, flowing to the Black Sea; the Po and the Adige, to the Adriatic; the Vistula to the Baltic, and the Elbe to the German Ocean; it contains also a great many lakes, the most important of which are, in the mntn. regions, the lakes Maggiore, Como, Lugano, Iseo, & Garda, on the S. slopes of the Alps; and in the plains, the Platten-See, and L. Neusiedel, the two most extensive sheets of water in the Empire, in Hungary, which country, from its flatness, contains also the greatest number of marshes. The principal gulfs are those of Venice, Trieste, Quarnero, and Cattaro. The Austrian Emp. is comprised between the isotherm lines of 60° and 50°. The Alpine region is the most rainy country in Europe, the greatest amount of rain falls in the N. of the Lombardo-Venetian kgdm., & the least in Hungary and Dalmatia. Storms are rare in Lower Austria, and become more frequent in the S. The annual proportion is 8 in Vienna, 28 in Hungary, and 42 in the plains of Venice. Volcanic phenomena are only met with in Dalmatia. Earthquakes occur in Dalmatia, Illyria, Hungary, and Transylvania. Glaciers and snow fields are confined to the Alps at an elev. of 8,000 ft. The soil in such an extensive territory is very varied; the plains of Italy and Hungary are the most fertile, next, the countries of Galicia, Bohemia, Moravia, Austria-Proprietary, and Styria. The flora of the Austrian States comprises the different grains, and wild and cultivated plants common to the countries of Central Europe, as vines, hops, tobacco, saffron, and a great variety of fruit-trees; a third part of the productive soil is covered by forests. The Alps and the mntns. of Bohemia and Moravia produce the pine, the beech, and the larch; while the forests of Hungary, Galicia, Transylvania, and the military frontier furnish the oak, beech, and elm. The Empire may be divided into the 3 following zones of vegetation:—S., the zone of olives and rice, betw. lat. 42° & 46°; central, that of the vine and maize, and between lat. 46° and 49°, and N. that of grain, hops, and hemp, between lat. 49° and 51°. The vegetation of these zones is modified by the elevation of the soil; thus the vine ceases at a height of 1,750 ft., the oak at 3,000 ft., cereals generally at 4,500 ft., pines at 6,000 ft., and pasture at the limits of snow in the Alps. Among the fauna of Austria may be noticed the bear (in the Alps and Carpathians), the wolf and the fox, the lynx, and the chamois in the high Alps, the jackal in Dalmatia, the marten, otter, marmot, and beaver, the wild boar, and wild cat, the stag, deer, hare and rabbit. Eagles and other birds of prey inhabit the mntns., and herons are plenty in the plains. Fish is abundant in most of the streams, and leeches are exported in immense quantities from the marshes.

Austria is among the richest mineral countries in Europe; there is gold in Transylvania and Hungary, silver in Hungary, Bohemia, Transylvania, and Styria, mercury in Carinthia, tin in Bohemia, copper in nearly all the prov., lead in Carinthia, iron in all the countries except on the low shores of the Adriatic; antimony in Hungary, salt in Galicia, Transylvania, & the Tyrol, and coal in all the provs. The Empire contains also all kinds of building materials, and precious stones, and is especially rich in mineral springs, the most celebrated of which are at Karlsbad, Töplitz, and Marienbad.

The extent and pop. of the different states, is thus stated in the official reports:—

Provinces.		Area in sq.m.	Pop. (1849)
German.	Austria, . . . archduchy.	15,082	2,377,524
	Tyrol, . . . principality.	10,381	842,708
Slavonian.	Styria, . . . duchy.	6,870	983,742
	Bohemia, . . . kgdm.	10,960	1,222,621
Magyar, &c.	Moravia and Silesia, marq.	20,208	4,279,189
	Dalmatin, . . . kgdm.	10,339	2,233,749
Polish.	Hungary, with Slavonia and Croatia, . . . kgdm.	5,067	401,541
	Transylvania, . . . gd. princ.	89,400	10,590,000
Italian.	Military frontier, . . . kgdm.	21,300	2,108,408
	Galicia & Bukovina, kgdm.	15,179	1,220,503
Total.	Lombardo-Venetian, kgdm.	33,538	4,910,629
		17,511	4,803,289
Total.		267,830	35,804,152

The rate of increase of pop. is calculated at 377,576 annually, and it is computed that the total pop. in 1846 amounted to 38,000,000. According to race and language the entire pop. is divided thus:—

Germans, . . .	6,700,000	Armenians, . . .	22,100
Slavonians, . . .	16,500,000	Jews, . . .	641,000
Italians, &c., . . .	6,700,000	Gipsies, . . .	77,000
Illyrians, . . .	3,300	Magyars, . . .	5,900,000
Greeks, . . .	6,660	Tartars, . . .	170,000

In 1840, the number of towns was 795, of which 1. (Vienna) had upwards of 350,000 inhabs.; 3 (Milan, Prague, and Venice) more than 100,000; 5 above 40,000; 7 above 30,000; 11 above 20,000; and 35 above 10,000. Boroughs 2,315, and villis, 69,002. The pop. belongs to 4 principal families,—the Deutsch or German, Slavonian, Italian, & Hungarian or Magyars. German is the language of the countries inhab. by the 1st named family, and the idiom employed by the superior administration; the different Slavonian dialects by the 2d; Italian, and a mixed dialect by the 3d; and the Magyar by the 4th. French is the diplomatic language of Austria. Agriculture is in many parts of the empire in a very backward state, and it is computed that the country could support at least double the present amount of its pop. In Styria, Illyria, and the Tyrol, the rearing of cattle forms the chf. branch of agric. industry, and the produce of wine is abundant. Lombardy and Venice raise a great amount of wheat, maize, and rice, the extent of the latter being only restricted by sanitary considerations. The rearing of silk worms is also one of the chf. sources of wealth in the prov. Galicia and Bohemia produce grain in great abundance. Moravia and Silesia are in general well cultivated, and the produce exceeds the wants of the pop. Hungary also yields abundance of grain. Cattle forms one of the chf. sources of wealth; they are reared in great numbers in all the Alpine countries. Horses are numerous and of a good breed; and there are 15 varieties of sheep. Mining is one of the chief branches of industry in the empire. Since the peace manuf. industry has made great progress in Austria. In 1834 the number of manufs. was 11,064, employing about 2,330,000 workmen. The most important articles produced are woollens, linens, cotton, silks, steel, and wood and glass wares. The principal goods imported are colonial products, oils, corn, cattle, cotton, and cotton yarn, hides, skins, and metals; principal exports, silk, wool, woollen goods, glass, steel, linen, and hemp manufs., timber, and seeds. The means of communication in Austria are extensive, & many of the great routes, as that of the Simplon, are remarkable as works of art. The 1st railway opened in Austria, extends from Linz on the Danube, N. to Budweis on the Moldau, and S. to Wells and Gmunden, it is worked by horse-power. In 1848, the principal lines of railway in operation and progress were as follows:—1. from Vienna S. to Grätz; 2. Grätz to Cilly; 3. Cilly to Triest (in progress); 4. Vienna N.W. to Stockerau, and E. to Brück; 5. Vienna N. to Brünn, and N. and N.W. to Olmütz and Prague. In Nor. Italy, the great trunk line from Milan E. to Venice, opened for traffic nearly half its extent, and that from Milan N. to Menza. In Hungary the principal lines are, 1. from Pesth E. to Szolnok (or from the Danube to the Theiss); 2. from Pesth N. to Waitzen, and from Presburg N.E. to Tyrnan. Steam packets are established on the Danube, and on the lakes of the Lomb.-Venetian Kingdom, in which provs. canals are numerous. The Austrian monarchy is composed of states which recognise the same sovereign, but are governed by different laws; it takes the first rank in the states of the German confederation. The crown is hereditary by order of primogeniture in the male, and failing it in the female line. The government was a monarchy, nearly absolute; but since the revolution of 1848, a representative assembly of the different states has been formed; and Transylvania has been wholly incorporated with Hungary. Nearly each prov. has distinct usages and peculiarities of government. The anc. Hungarian provinces.—viz., Hungary, Transylvania, Croatia, & Slavonia, have their own diets, & are, to a certain extent, independent of the court of Vienna; but in most of the W. provs. (the Tyrol excepted), the rule of the emperor is more direct. The imperial cabinet consisted (in 1848) of 5 members, under whom a council undertook the 7 departments; viz. justice, the army, police, exchequer, finance, health, and education. By this council, and 11 administrative boards for the different provs., all sitting in Vienna, the business of the state is managed. In Galicia, Dalmatia, and all the W. provs., the civil and criminal courts for the ennobled ranks, and for the rest of the pop., are separate; appeal lies from their primary jurisdiction to the superior courts in Vienna, Klagenfurth, Innsbruck, Prague, Brünn, Lemberg, Zara, and Verona; and from these a second appeal to the Board of justice,—except in Transylvania, where the gubernium, or court of appeal, is the highest under the emperor. The subordinate civil divisions of the provs. are into counties in Hungary and Transylvania, viertels (quarters) in Lower Austria, delegations in Austrian Italy, and circles elsewhere. The empire is ecclesiastically divided into 15 archbishoprics, 76 bishoprics, 19 Protest. superintendencies, and 28,903 parishes, of which 19,503 are R. Catholic, and 9,400 are acatholic. The secular clergy amounted in 1842 to 56,988 persons, of whom 46,555 were R. Catholic priests, and 10,433 ministers of other denominations. In the same year the census gave the number of R. Catholics as 24,874,139; of Greek communicants 6,469,406; Protestants 3,244,788; Unitarians 45,769; & Jews 668,906. The Greek Catholics & the Protestants mostly inhabit the E. provs.; the Unitarians are nearly confined to Transylvania. The administration of public instruction is under the direction of a separate commission, and extends to all parts of education, and the public schools are subject to uniform laws, they are classed into high schools, gymnasiums and classical schools, and elementary schools. The number of national schools (exclusive of Hungary, Transylvania, and the military frontier) is 28,380, & pupils 2,605,801, being nearly 1 to every 10 of the pop. There were, in 1848, 9 universities, having their seats at Vienna, Prague, Padua, Pavia, Pesth, Lemberg, Grätz, Innsbruck, and Olmütz, with 419 professors, and 15,794 students. The military force of the empire is composed of a standing army, and an army of reserve (Landwehr). The permanent force in time of peace is 414,000 men, and during war 639,659. Austria possesses a great many fortifications, of which Josephstadt, Theresienstadt, Olmütz, Mantua, Peschiera, and Comorn, belong to the 1st class; Peterwardein, Brod, Altgradisca, Arad, Eszeg, Karistadt, Karlsburg, Munkatsch, Temeswar, Ragusa, Cattaro, Zara, Legnago, Venice, Kufstein, Salzburg, Prague, and Königgrätz to the 2d class. Austria also maintains garrisons in Mentz, Piacenza, Ferrara, and Comacchio. The naval armament, under a uaval commander at Venice, consists of 8 vessels in ordinary, 3 frigates, 2 corvettes, 3 brigs, 3 schooners, & 46 smaller vessels, mounting in all 510 guns. There is besides, an armed flotilla on the Danube. The public revenues arise from direct taxes on property, industry, & incomes, with personal and Jews' taxes, indirect imposts on tobacco and provisions, a salt monopoly, legacy and stamp duties, post-office and custom dues, and the revenues from the crown domains and mines; the whole estim. (in 1847) to amount to 15,000,800*l.* yearly. The greater proportion was contributed by Bohemia, Galicia, Illyria, & the German & Italian provs.; Hungary contributes a certain sum voted by the Diet, and supports a fixed number of troops; & in Dalmatia a tithe of the land produce is taken in lieu of taxes. The expenditure is not readily ascertained; the army, and internal administration, are the principal sources of expense. The publ. debt in 1847 was about 99,000,000*l.* sterling. (For recent changes in the government, see GERMANV and VIENNA).

AUSTRIAN ITALY comprises the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, the Italian Tyrol, and a great part of the government of Trieste, in Illyria.

It is picturesque seated at the foot of finely wooded mountains, and has a lofty gothic cathedral, a college, library, museum, large seminary, and tribunal of commerce, with manufs. of carpets and paper, and a considerable trade in timber, hemp, and cattle. Large masses of its anc. walls remain, with two very beautiful and perfect gates, the ruins of an amphitheatre and of several temples, a pyramid and numerous fragments of other Roman edifices; it has also a choice collection of anc. medals. The see of Autun was once held by Talleyrand.

AUTUNCARAY, a seaport town of British India, presid. Madras, dist. Madura, 11 m. E. Ramnad. It has a coasting trade in rice and tobacco.

AUVERGNE (MOUNTAINS OF), a branch of the Cevennes, extending chiefly in the depts. Puy-de-Dôme and Cantal, and separating the basins of the Allier, Cher, and Creuse, from those of the Lot and Dordogne. These mountains form extensive and very confused groups, which throw out considerable contreforts to the N. and S., and contain the culminating points of the interior of France; viz., the Mont Dor 6,188 feet, Cantal 6,093 feet, and Puy-de-Dôme 4,806 feet. They contain a great number of extinct volcanoes, and present sites of the wildest and most picturesque grandeur. The cone of Mont Dor rises abruptly to a height of several thousand feet, and is composed of layers of scoria, pumice-stone, and fine detritus mixed with beds of basalt. The numerous minor volcanoes form an irregular ridge, extending along the platform 18 m. in length & 2 m. in breadth. They are generally truncated at the top, and the crater is often entire.

AUVERGNE, an old prov. of France, forming the present depts. of Cantal, Puy-de-Dôme, and a small part of H.-Loire. It was divided into upper and lower Auvergne, and had for caps. respectively St Flour and Clermont.

AUVERS, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Seine-et-Oise, 3 m. E.N.E. Pontoise, on the railway from Paris to Amiens. Pop. 1,530.

AUXONNE, a fortified town of France, dep.

Cote-d'Or, on l. b. of the Saône, here crossed by a long bridge, 17 m. S.E. Dijon. Pop. (1846) 2,944. It is generally well built; its ramparts, planned by Vauban, now form public walks; and it has an arsenal, barracks, and magazines, with manufs. of woollen cloth, and nails.

AUXY-LE-CHATEAU, a comm. and town of France, dep. Pas-de-Calais, cap. cant., on the Authie, 15 m. S.W. St Pol. Pop. (1846) 2,342.

AUZANCES, a comm. and town of France, dep. Creuse, 32 m. S.E. Gueret. Pop. 1,251.

AUZON, a comm. and vill., France, dep. H. Loire, on rt. b. of the Allier, 34 m. N.W. Fny.

AVA (Aeng-wa, "a fish pond"), a city formerly cap. of the Burmese domin., on the Irrawadi, 350 m. N. Rangoon. Lat. 21° 51' N.; lon. 95° 58' 10" E. It consists of an outer and inner city, both fortified; & had numerous temples; but its houses generally are mere huts, and on March 23d, 1839, every substantial edifice was destroyed by an earthquake; since which period the seat of government has been transferred to Monchobo.

AVA, two princips. of Japan.—I. isl. Nippon, with a cap. town, 50 m. E.S.E. Yeddo.—II. isl. Sikoko, with a town on its N. coast, lat. 33° 53' N., lon. 134° 12' E., with the best harb. in the island.

AVAILLES LIMOUSINE, a comm. and town of France, dep. Vienne, cap. cant., on l. b. of the Vienne, 17 m. E. Civray. Pop. 1,855. Its trade is mostly in wine and mill-stones.

AVAIL ISLAND, Persian Gulf. [BAHRAIN.]

AVALLON, Aballo, a comm. and town of France, dep. Yonne, cap. arrond., on the Voisin, 26 m. S.E. Auxerre. Pop. (1846) 4,896. The town is situated in a country renowned for fertility and picturesque sites, and has an active trade, and manufs. of woollen cloths and paper.

AVASI, or AVADSI, a town of Japan, cap. isl. Sikoko, S. Nippon. Lat. 34° 21' N.; lon. 134° 47' E.

AVATCHA (MOUNT), a volcano of Kamtchatka, near its E. coast, in lat. 53° 15' N., lon. 158° 50' E., rising to 9,055 feet elevation. At its summit is a crater several hundred yards in circ., and on its E. side, 5,000 feet elevation, is another crater, similar in origin and appearance to M. Somma (Vesuvius). In 1827, Avatcha was in violent eruption, and discharged, with lava and stones, a vast quantity of water. About 20 m. Sward is the Bay of Avatcha, the best on the coast of Kamtchatka, and on which are the towns Avatcha and Petropaulovsk.

AVEBURY, or AUBRY, a pa. of England, co. Wilts, 6 m. W. Marlborough. Area 5,450 ac. Pop. 751. Its church is of high antiquity; and the vill. occupies the site of a structure, ascribed to the Druids, similar to that of Stonehenge, but which must have been on a scale still more stupendous. Few traces of it now remain, the stones having been used for repairing roads. In the pa. is Silbury-hill, 170 feet in height, and reputed to be the largest barrow in Britain.

AVEIRAS DE CIMA, a town of Portugal, prov. Estremadura, 20 m. S.W. Santarem. Pop. 1,073.

AVEIRO, a seaport town of Portugal, prov. Beira, on the estuary of the Vouga, 31 m. N.W. Coimbra. Pop. 5,000, with extensive fisheries of anchovies, herrings, and oysters, and commerce in salt, fish, oil, wine, and oranges.—AVEIRO, a town of Brazil, prov. Para, on the Tapajós, 70 m. S.E. Santarem. Lat. 3° 28' S., lon. 55° 25' W.

AVELEY, a pa. of Engl., co. Essex, 2 m. N.E. Purfleet. Area 3,920 ac. Pop. 849. Fair, Easter Mond.

AVELGEHEM, a vill. of Belgium, prov. West Flanders, on l. b. of the Scheldt, 8 m. S.E. Courtrai. Pop. 4,711. Chief industry, brewing, and manufacture of tobacco and candles.

AVELLA, a town of Italy, kgdm. & 20 m. E.N.E. Naples, of which city it commands a fine view. Pop. 5,600. Near it are the remains of Abella, celebrated by Virgil (Æneid, vii. 740).

AVELLINO, Abellinum, a fortified episc. city, kgdm. and 28 m. E. Naples, cap. prov. Princip. Ult. Pop. 13,500. It has a cathedral, several churches, a college, a public granary, manufactures of woollen fabrics, paper, macaroni, and sausages, and an extensive trade in hazel nuts (termed nucis Avellane), chestnuts, & corn. This city has hardly recovered from the devastations of the earthquake of 1694. Betw. Avellino, and Benevento, is the Val di Gargano, the position of the Caudine Forks, famous for the victory of the Samnites over the Romans, who were there made to pass under the yoke, in the year of Rome 433.

AZORES, or WESTERN ISLANDS (Portug. Açores), a group of 9 isls. in the N. Atlantic Ocean betw. lat. 36° 55' and 39° 44' N., and lon. 25° 10' and 31° 16' W., belonging to Portugal, from which they are distant about 800 m. W. They consist of the following isls. ranging from E. to W.—St Mary, St Michael, Terceira, Graciosa, San Jorge, Pico, Fayal, Flores, and Corvo, with some rocky islets, and have an united area of about 700 sq. m., and a pop. of 214,300 (in 1841). They are of volcanic origin, with steep and rugged coasts, and abounding with deep ravines and elev. mntns., the lowest of which, Pico Alto in St Mary's, is 1,869 feet, and the most elev., the peak of Pico, 7,613 feet in height. The climate of the isls. is very temperate and healthy, the therm. ranging from 45° to 86° Fahr. They are subject to violent earthquakes, but are well watered and extremely fertile, producing excellent wines, all kinds of grain and pulse more than adequate for home consumption, with bananas, oranges, and other fruits of the finest quality, the sugar-cane, coffee, tobacco, roccella, &c. The few birds or animals on the isls. resemble those of Britain, and two-thirds of its plants are British. Breeds of live stock, especially hogs, originally imported from Europe, are reared in considerable numbers. Princip. expts. oranges, wines, brandy, grain, and pulse, salt-pork and beef, cheese, &c., to Portugal, and coarse linens to Portugal and Brazil. rum, coffee, sugar, &c. from Brazil; salt, lime, tea, and relig. appurtenances from Portugal. The inhabs. are a mixture of Portuguese & Negroes. The Azores were first colonized by the Portuguese of the 15th century, at which time they were uninhab. and covered with forests. They form a colonial government, of which the cap. is Angra, in the isl. of Terceira; but Ponta Delgada, and Riheira Grande, in St Miguel, are larger towns. A notice of each of the principal isls. will be found under its proper name.

AZOV (SEA OR GULF OF), Palus Mæotis, an immense lagoon of S. Europe, between lat. 45° 20' and 47° 18' N., and lon. 35° and 39° E., nearly enclosed by the Russian doms. N.E. of the Black Sea, with which it communicates by the Strait of Yenikale (anc. Cimmerian Bosphorus). Length S.W. to N.E. about 235 m.; greatest breadth 110 m. The Don enters it at its N.E. extremity; and on its shores are the towns Taganrog, Mariupol, Yenikale, and Azov. This gulf is supposed to have been at one time connected with the Caspian Sea, by means of a strait, which is still indicated by a low tract of land. The E. shore is low, the N. rises to about 100 feet. The W. is formed by the sandy peninsula of Arabat, which separates it from the Sivach or Putrid Sea. The greatest depth is 7½ fath. on the N. side, and in some places there is only 4 or 5 feet water. It appears to be gradually filling up, and its muddy shores are very unhealthy. The expts. from Taganrog and other ports of the Sea of Azov in 1842 amounted in value to 492,731*l.*; and in the same year 342 vessels, of which 14 were British, arrived in that sea, and returned with cargoes. (See also Taganrog.) The fisheries of this sea are important. It is usually frozen from November to March, when navigation ceases.

BAALEBEC or BALBEC the Baalath of scripture, and Heliopolis of the Greeks, a ruined town of Syria, formerly a city of great size and magnificence, sit. on the lowest declivity of Anti-Libanus in a valley opening into the plain of El-Bekaa, 43 m. N.W. Damascus, lat. 34° 1' 30" N., lon. 36° 11' E. Its remains, more extensive than those seen any where else in Syria, except at Palmyra, comprise three temples, two formed with immense stones, besides numerous columns, altars, and the vestiges of the city walls 3 to 4 m. in circuit. The date of its origin is lost in remote antiquity. A great temple, one of the wonders of the world, was erected by Antoninus Pius. It continued a place of great importance down to the time of the Moslem invasion, was sacked A. o. 748, and finally pillaged by Timur Bey in 1400. The present village, to the east of the ruins, has fallen greatly into decay, and contains about

2,000 inhabs. Some of its ruined buildings were probably erected as late as the age of Hadrian or Antoninus Pius; but others are evidently of a much earlier date, and answer to the account given of the "House of the Forest of Lebanon," built by Solomon. (1 Kings vii. 2-5, 8-12.)

BABYE, a town of British India, presid. Bengal, Saugur, S.W. dist., 15 m. E. Hussingabad.

BABYLON, the earliest post-diluvial city, & the oldest in the world of which there are any traces remaining. Anciently the capital of the Baby-lonic-Chaldean empire, in an extensive plain on the Euphrates riv., pash. and 60 m. S. Bagdad. The modern town Hillah occupies a portion of its site. Lat. 32° 28' 30" N., lon. 44° 9' 45" E. According to Herodotus, the walls of Babylon were 60 m. in circumference, 87 ft. thick, and 350 ft. high, built of brick, and containing 25 gates of solid brass, and 250 towers. The ruins of Birs-Nimrod on an elev. mount, are supposed to be the Tower of Babel of the sacred scriptures, and the Temple of Belus minutely described by Herodotus. The base of this tower measures 2,082 ft. in circumf.; its remains, constructed of the most beautiful brick masonry, are 28 ft. in breadth. Babylon was in its glory in the time of Nebuchadnezzar. It was besieged and taken by Cyrus, B. C. 538, & afterwards by Alexander the Great. Out of its ruins four great capitals, besides other cities, were built. The most prominent of the remaining ruins are Birs Nimrod, the Kasr on supposed site of palace of Nebuchadnezzar, and the Mujahlibah, on the riv. bank, 5 m. from Hillah.

BABYLONIA, the ancient name of a province in middle Asia, now called Bagdad, bounded on N. by Mesopotamia, E. by Tigris r., S. by Persian Glf., and W. by Arabian desert. The Katzenbuckel, summ. of the Odenwald, 2,300 feet; the Randen, 2,600 feet; and the Kaiserstuhl, an isolated volc. mass near Briesach, 1,900 ft. The whole W. part of the territory is a continuous plain, formed by the val. of the Rhine, and extending between it and the mtns. from Basle to Mannheim. Principal rivers, the Rhine, which forms the S. and W. boundary of the state, the Murg, Kinzig, & Weisen-Mayn, Neckar, and Danube, which last rises in the grand duchy. The Lake of Constance forms part of the S.E. frontier, and there are several small lakes in the interior. The climate is very mild in all the valley of the Rhine; rigorous in the mountain districts, the summits of which are only free from snow during the height of summer. The vine is cultivated at an elev. of 1,400 ft. The soil is in general very fertile, especially in the valleys of the Rhine and Neckar. Agriculture constitutes the chief wealth of the state, and is conducted with more skill than in any other part of Germany. Barley, wheat, maize, potatoes, fine hemp, flax, and tobacco, are raised. The cultivation of fruit-trees is extensively carried on, and fruit is grown in great abundance. The produce of wine in ten recent years averaged upwds. of 13,400,000 gallons annually. The meadows are irrigated in the Italian style. Great attention has been bestowed on improving the breeds of sheep, and cattle are extensively reared. Produce of timber estimated at nearly 1 million cubic fathoms annually; masts of 150 ft. in length, and fine oak timber, are floated in rafts to the mouth of the Rhine. Mineral products comprise salt from springs, alum, vitriol, sulphur, and coal, iron, copper, lead, and a little silver: gold-washing, formerly pretty general along the Rhine, is now insignificant. The duchy is extremely rich in mineral springs. Manufactures have of late materially increased; the principal are cotton-spinning and weaving, riband-making, and the production of beet-root sugar. Important branches of industry in the Schwarzwald are the manufs. of strawplait, wooden ornaments, watches, clocks, jewellery, musical boxes, & organs. Principal expts., timber, wine, corn, and Kirchwasser, salt, linen & cotton goods, wooden clocks, straw hats & paper. Principal imports, colonial produce, drugs, wool, horses, fruits, iron and steel, silk fabrics, and articles of luxury. The accession of the duchy to the Prussian Customs' Union in 1835, has greatly increased the transit trade, which is favoured by the creation of free ports at Constance, &c., and by steam navigation on the Lake of Constance, the Rhine, Neckar, and Main. The lines of road are in general excellent, and a railway extends along the whole length of the territory from Basel to Mannheim, with branches to Kehl and Baden. Gov. exercised by the grand duke, a chamber of peers, and a chamber consisting of 22 deputies from towns, and 41 from rural districts; and was known as the most tolerant and liberal in Germany. The majority of the population is Roman Catholic, but the reigning family is Protestant. The grand duchy possesses an excellent system of public instruction, and the schools are numerous. Attendance at school is obligatory on all children; and each village has at least one primary school. Baden has two universities, among the most ancient and celebrated in Germany; that of Heidelberg has a faculty for Lutheran, and that of Freiburg for Catholic theology. The former had, in 1847, 65 professors and 955 students, and the latter 219 students. There are 4 public libraries in the grand duchy. Circle judicial courts, subordinate to the supreme court at Mannheim, sit at Constance, Freiburg, Mannheim, and Rastadt. Standing army amounts during a part of the year to about 10,400 men. Public revenue (1845), 15,308,732 florins; expend. 14,489,715 do.; public debt (1839), 30,696,737 do. Baden lately held the 7th place in the German confed., and had 3 votes in the full council, and one in committee. Contribution to confederate army, 10,000 men.

BAGDAD, PASHALIC OF (Chaldæa, Mesopotamia), an extensive region of Asiatic Turkey, of which it forms the S.E. portion, mostly between lat. 30° and 38° N., and lon. 40° and 48° E., having N. the pashalics Diarbekir and Van, W. & S. Syria and Arabia, E. Persia, and at its S.E. extremity the Persian Gulf. Length from N.W. to S.E. 550 m. Breadth 350 m. The Euphrates & Tigris flow through the district for about 950 m., when both these rivers unite at Korna, in lat. 31° N., and lon. 47° E. The united river now called Shat-al-Arab flows into the Persian Gulf. The country E. of the Tigris includes Koordistan & Khuzistan; the plains of the former are fertile, producing grain and fruit; the latter, though possessing a good soil, is almost a desert waste; it is, however, famed for its dates. The country to the W. of the Euphrates is a flat sandy desert, without water, and destitute of herbage; with the exception of the banks of the river, which are very fertile. The lower part is healthy, producing abundant rice crops. That part of the district comprehended between the Tigris and Euphrates, consists of Al-Jezirah towards the N., a barren desert, and Irak Arabi, beginning where the two rivers approach near each other, to the N. of Bagdad, and extending to the Persian Gulf. This, which was one of the most fertile countries in the time of Herodotus, is now almost a complete desert. The pop. of the pashalic is very mixed, consisting of Arabs, Kurds, Turkomans, Armenians, Turks, Jews; some of whom, as the Arabs and Kurds, are but imperfectly subject to the Porte, and live under different chiefs often at war with each other. Principal cities, Bagdad, Bassorah, and Mosul. In this region may be traced the sites of the anc. Babylon, Nineveh, Ctesiphon, and Seleucia: the memorable field of Arbela, where Alexander finally brokethepower of Darius, and many other localities famous in sacred and profane history, are within its limits.

BAGDAD, a city of Asiatic Turkey, cap. of above pashalic, and formerly of the Saracen caliphate, on the Tigris, 220 m. above where the united rivers enter the Persian Gulf. Lat. 33° 19' 40" N., lon. 44° 24' 45" E. Pop. 65,000 (?), mostly Arabs and Turks. It stands on both sides of the river, its two portions being connected by a bridge of boats; it is enclosed by a brick and earthen wall, flanked with large towers, & is about 5 m. in circumference, including gardens and plantations of date-trees. Streets narrow, irregular, and houses in general meanly built; but some fine old structures remain, comprising the "gate of the Talisman," a lofty minaret built in 785, the tomb of Zobeide wife of the caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, the tomb of a Turkish saint of the 12th century. The edifice of its famous college, founded in 1233, now serves for a caravanseraï and the custom-house. A citadel, though of no great strength, here commands the passage of the Tigris. There are about 100 mosques, many of them with lofty domes and minarets. The bazaars are large, and abound with most of the goods sold in European markets. Red and yellow leather, silks, and cotton stuffs are manufactured, and this city was long the great emporium of all the surrounding countries; but its commerce has declined since Persia has received European goods from the N. by way of Trebizond, and on the S. direct from India and the Persian Gulf. Bagdad has still, however, a large trade with Aleppo and Damascus, whence it imports cotton twist, calicoes, shirtings, prints, imitation shawls, dyes, and to which it exports tombac, galls, buffalo hides, E. India indigo, pearls, Cashmere shawls, coffee. Its climate is generally healthy, but great heats during a part of the year oblige the inhabs. then to live underground. This city, built out of the ruins of Ctesiphon, was founded by Almanzor in 763, and continued to flourish under succeeding caliphs, until sacked by Hoolagoo in 1259. It has been held by the Turks since 1638.—Bagdat is a small fortified town, Asiatic Russia, gov. Transcaucasia, dist. Imeretia, 15 m. S.S.E. Kutais.

BALTIC PROVINCES, is the name applied to the Russian governments of Courland, Esthonia, Livonia, and St. Petersburg, with the principality of Finland, situated on the Baltic Sea.

BALTIC, or EAST SEA, Mare Balticum (Germ. Ostsee), an extensive Mediterranean Sea of N.

Europe, enclosed by Sweden, Russia, Prussia, Mecklenburg, and Denmark, and communicating with the Kattegat and the North Sea by the Sound and the Great and Little Belts. It extends from Swinemünde in the S. to Tornea in the N. about 900 m., and from Carlscrona in the W. to Memel in the E. about 180 m., and its area, including the Gulf of Bothnia, occupies a space of about 25,000 square geographical miles, or little less than the North Sea. Notwithstanding its great extent the Baltic has all the characteristics of an inland sea or great lake. No sea has, in proportion to its size, so great an influx of fresh water, hence it contains but little salt. In proportion to the North sea this is found to be as 194 to 373. The N. part of the Baltic is generally called the Gulf of Bothnia; on the E. are the Gulfs of Finland and Riga, on the S.E. the Gulf of Danzig, & on the S.W. the Gulf of Lübeck. The depth of the Baltic on the W. is not more than 15 fathoms, and in general it is only from 8 to 10 fathoms deep; on the S. it is nowhere more than 50 fathoms; but towards the N. it deepens to 100 fathoms. The Baltic receives the waters of the Motala-Elv, the lakes of Mæler, Onega, and Ladoga, the Düna, Niemen, Vistula, and the Oder, besides numerous smaller streams. The great amount of sand and mud carried down by the rivers has considerably raised the bottom of this sea, and closed the mouths of many of its navigable streams, so that ships which formerly entered these rivers, must now be anchored at a considerable distance from their mouths. This, together with the numerous islands and sandbanks, and the gradual upward movement of the bed of the sea (at the rate of several feet in a century), renders navigation on the Danish shores of the Baltic troublesome and dangerous. The chief islands of this sea are those of the Danish Archipelago, between the coasts of Jütland and Sweden; the islands of Rügen, Bornholm, Öland, Gottland, Dago, and Oesel, the group of Aland, and that of Holmön. The Baltic has no tides, or rather the effect of the tide is so little felt as not to be observable; but it is subject to changes of level, depending on the winds, retarding or accelerating the passage of the water through the sound and the belts. Thus, during a N. E. wind the S.W. portion of the sea is often raised as much as 4 feet above the usual level of the North Sea. This has led to the erroneous opinion that the Baltic is always higher than the German Ocean; on the contrary, after N.W. gales and during spring tides, the Atlantic rises, and pouring a flood into the Baltic, commits great havoc among the islands of the Danish Archipelago. The great amount of water which flows into the Baltic, especially during the melting of the snow in spring, occasions a general current in the direction of the ocean; and it has been calculated that the number of days in which the water flows into the Kattegat, is in proportion to those in which it follows in an opposite direction, as 24 to 1. During winter this sea is usually frozen to a greater or less distance along the coasts; and in severe winters, not only the sound and the belts, but a great part of its surface, is covered with ice. In the reign of King Christopher (1324) the Baltic was frozen so hard, that for 6 weeks the people travelled between Denmark and Germany on the ice. The Baltic contains abundance of fish, and a great quantity of amber is gathered on its S. shores. The most important ports are St. Petersburg, Riga, Königsberg, Danzig, Stralsund, Lübeck, Copenhagen, Carlscrona, Stockholm, and Christiania.

BALTIMORE, a seaport town of Ireland, at its S. extremity, prov. Munster, co. Cork, on a small bay of the Atlantic, 47 m. S.W. Cork. Lat. 51° 29' N., lon. 9° 20' W. Pop. 168. It has a considerable coast trade. Registered shipping belonging to the port (1847), 120 vessels, 3,926 tons.

Surface hilly but not mountainous.—Cap. Baltimore, on the l. b. of the Patapsco river, 14 m. from its entrance into Chesapeake Bay, 34 m. N.E. Washington, & 92 m. S.W. Philadelphia. Lat. 39° 17' N., lon. 76° 36' W. Pop. (1850) 169,012. It has spacious streets regularly laid out around a basin, forming its inner harbour. Chief structures, the city hall, courthouse, state penitentiary, jail, 2 hospitals, a Roman Catholic cathedral, university, Roman Catholic college, atheneum, exchange, union bank, theatres, museum, picture gallery, several handsome bridges and fountains, an elegant obelisk, commemorating the defence of the city against the British in 1814, and a Doric column of white marble 160 feet in height, surmounted by a colossal statue of Washington. The outer harbour, defended by a fort, has 22 feet water; the 2d, about 1 m. in length, has 15 feet; and the 3d, or inner basin, is 10 feet in depth. Reg. shipping belonging to the port (1841), 83,638 tons. Imports into Maryland, almost entirely through Baltimore, amounted in the year ending Sept. 1841, to 6,101,313 dolls. in value; exports ditto, chiefly flour and tobacco, amounted to 4,947,166 dolls. Its inland trade has been greatly facilitated by canals and railways connecting it N. ward with Philadelphia, S. ward with Washington and Charlestown, and W. ward with Ohio and the Mississippi rivers. In the vicinity are numerous cotton and flour mills. Total estimated capital employed in manufs. (1840), 2,729,983 dollars. Baltimore, first laid out as a town in 1729, has become one of the handsomest cities in the United States: and its citizens are eminent for their union of social refinement with commercial enterprise.—II. New Baltimore, a tnshp. Area of bor. 980 ac. Pop. 52,346, but this number is said to be frequently augmented by 14,000 visitors.

Bath was known to the Romans under the name of Aque Solis; and baths were erected in the reign of Claudius. The earliest extant charter is that of Richard I., which was confirmed by Henry III., and extended to its present form in reign of George III. The city stands enclosed by an amphitheatre of hills, on the W. declivity of which its finest quarters extend in successive terraces; and being mostly built of white freestone, in a highly embellished style of architecture, is allowed to be the handsomest city in Britain. Principal edifices, the Abbey church, in the latest Gothic style, 210 feet in length, and with a tower 170 ft. in height; St James', St Michael's; the guild hall, city jail, a superb theatre, the free-masons' lodge, subscription club-house, assembly and concert rooms, several large and flourishing hospitals, and the buildings connected with its famous baths. In the W. of the city is the Royal Victoria Park; & it has numerous other favourite promenades & places of publ. recreation, among which are the Sidney gardens. Bath has many educational and other establishments; among which are a grammar school, founded by Edward VI., and to the mastership of which is attached the rect. of Charlcombe; bluecoat and national schools; Partis' college for 30 decayed gentlewomen, the hospital of St John the Baptist, with an income of 11,395*l.*; a Roman Cath. collegiate establish.; the Bath and W. of England society, Bath literary and philosophical institution, a public subscription library, & a mechanics' institute. The hot springs, to which this city owes its origin, are saline and chalybeate, temp. 90° to 117° Fahr.; they rise immediately on the bank of the riv., and supply five distinct establishments, the King's, Queen's, Cross, Hot, and Abbey baths. The first four belong to the corporation, and yielded, in 1839, a rev. of 1,646*l.* To the King's bath is attached the great pump-room, a saloon 85 ft. in length, 48 in breadth, and 34 in height, and containing a marble statue of the celebrated "Beau Nash," the arbiter of fashion at Bath for 50 years during the last century, and to whom the city owed much of its prosperity. The Abbey baths are the property of Earl Mansers, and are furnished in a style adapted for the wealthy classes, by whom, however, Bath has ceased to be frequented so much as formerly; having been superseded by Brighton, Cheltenham, &c. Its former manuf. of coarse woollens, termed "Bath coating," has greatly declined: its shoops, however, are generally as well supplied as those of London, which they rival in appearance. The city is well situated for general commerce, & communicates with Bristol and various other towns by the Kennet and Avon canal. Corporation rev. (1846-7) 21,345*l.*; expend. 19,928*l.*; assessed taxes, 30,878*l.* 10s. Bath sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1842-3) 2,941. Mkts., Wed. & Sat. Fairs, Feb. 14 & July 10. BAVARIA (CIRCLE OF), an old subdivision of Germany, which comprised the S. & E. portions of the modern kgdm. of Bavaria, E. of the Rhine, with the archbishopric of Salzburg.

BAVARIA (Kingdom of), (Germ. Bayern or Baiern, Lat. Bavaria Vindelicia), a state of central Europe, forming part of the German confederation, cap. MÜNCHEN. (Munich.) This kingdom is composed of two isolated masses of territory, the E.ward & largest of which is sit. betw. lat. 47° 20', & 50° 41' N., & lon. 9° & 13° 48' E., & bounded N. by Hessen-Cassel, Saxe-Meningen, & Coburg Gotha, the princip. of Reuss, and the kingdom of Saxony; E. by Bohemia and Austria; S. by the Tirol; and W. by Württemberg, Baden, and Hessen Darmstadt. The westernmost, forming Rhenish Bavaria, or the Palatinate, the original possession of the reigning family, is situated on the W. of the Rhine, between lat. 48° 57', and 49° 50' N., and lon. 7° 5' and 8° 27' E., bounded N. by Rhenish Prussia and Hessen-Darmstadt; E. by Baden, from which it is separated by the Rhine; S. by France, and W. by Rhen. Prussia and Hessen Homburg. The state is divided into eight circles (kreise), the extent and population of which are as follow:—

Circles. (Kreise).	Area in sq. m.	Pop. Dec. 31, 1846.	Ch. Cities.
1. Oberbayern, (Upper Bavaria),	6,614	705,544	München.
2. Niederbayern, (Lower Bavaria),	4,113	543,709	Landshut.
3. Pfalz (Palatinate),	2,226	608,470	Speyer.
4. Oberpfalz and Regensburg,	4,108	467,606	Regensburg.
5. Oberfranken (Upper Franconia),	2,226	501,163	Baireuth.
6. Mittelfranken (Middle Franconia),	2,798	527,866	Ansbach.
7. Unterfranken and Aschaffenburg,	3,604	592,080	Würzburg.
8. Schwaben (Swabia), and Neuburg,	3,858	658,438	Augsburg.
Total,	29,637	4,504,874	.

The E. part of the territory lies betw. the Alps & the mntns. of Central Germany, occupying the basin of the Danube, which riv. traverses it for a space of 180 miles, and in that part of its course receives on the rt. the Iller, the Lech, the Isar, and the Inn; and on the left the Kocher, the Wörnitz, the Altmühl, the Naab, the Regen, and the Ilz. A small part of the N.E. of Bavaria belongs to the basin of the Elbe, and is watered by the Eger and the Saale. All the N. part of the princip. territory is drained by the Main, which has its source in the kingdom, and receives the Tauber, the Rodach, the Saale (of Franconia), and the Regnitz. Rhenish Bavaria belongs exclusively to the basin of the Rhine, which forms its E. boundary; it is watered by the Lauter, the Queich, and the Nahe. A small portion of the lake of Constance belongs to Bavaria; its other principal lakes form a chain along the S. slope of the Alps; they are the Ammer-See, in the bed of the riv. of the same name, the Würm-See, on an affl. of the Ammer, and the Chiem-See, formed by the riv. Alz. Its smaller lakes are the Staffel-, Kochel-, Walchen-, & Königs-see. The country is in general elevated and mountainous; the Alps, on the S., have, in the Zugspitz, an elev. of 10,150 ft. The highest points of the Böhmerwald, on the E., betw. Bavaria and Bohemia, are Arber, 4,613 ft., & Rachelberg, 4,561 ft.: its most remark. offset is the Bayerische-wald, betw. the Danube and Regen. The other principal chains are the Fichtelgebirge, on the N.E., in which the Schneeberg is 3,481 ft. in elev. This range is connected on the N.W. with the Thüringerwald, and on the N.E. with the Erzgebirge. The Frankischer Jura is a branch of the Fichtelgebirge, which extends S. between the Regnitz and the Vils. The N.most chain of Bavaria is the Rhöngebirge, culm. point the Krenzberg, 3,000 ft. in elev. S.W. of this is the Spessart, an offset of the Odenwald, in which the Hohewart is 1,968 ft. in elev. In Rhenish Bavaria the chief mountain is the Hardt, the culminating point of which, the Donnersberg, is 2,300 ft. in elevation.

The principal plains are the Donan moos, on the S. of the Danube, between the Lech and the Paar. The valley of the Lech, above and below Augsburg, and that of the Isar, between München and Freising.

The climate of Bavaria is temperate & healthy; although, on account of the general elevation of the surface, it is colder than the other countries of Germany sit. further north. The soil is one of the most fertile in central Europe; the mntns. yield excellent pasturage, and are covered with vast forests of valuable timber. Grain is cultiv. to an elev. of 3,280 ft.; forests reach to 5,300 ft.; & grazing extends to 8,500 ft., or the line of perpetual snow, which occurs only on the higher Alps.

The wealth of the country consists almost entirely in its agricultural produce. Besides the ordinary kinds of grain, a small quantity of buckwheat and maize is cultivated. The wines of Franconia, in the valleys of the Main, the Saal, and the Taüber, are much esteemed, especially those called Steinwein and Leistenwein, from the banks of the Leist, near Steinberg. Rhenish Bavaria also produces excellent wines, particularly those of the neighbourhood of Deidesheim and Wachenheim. The hops of Bavaria are esteemed for their excellent quality. Fruit is cultivated in considerable quantities, as well as hemp, flax, linseed, beet-root, & liquorice. Cattle rearing is the exclusive industry of the inhabitants of the Alps; sheep, of which the breed has been much improved of late, are of great importance in Mittelfranken, and pigs and goats are extensively reared in Unterfranken. The rearing of silkworms, which was recently introduced, has not yet attained any importance.

Although the soil of Bavaria is rich in useful minerals, they have never been extensively worked. Salt, coal, and iron, are the principal products. Salt, which is a government monopoly, is produced by evaporation, and from the rich mines of Berchtesgaden, Reichenhall, Traunstein, Rosenheim, Kissingen, Soden, Orb, Dürkheim, and Philipsthal. Iron is worked every where throughout the territory. Small quantities of copper, manganese, cobalt, and mercury, are produced in Rhenish Bavaria. There are numerous quarries of excellent marble, alabaster, gypsum, and building stones; and the porcelain clay is reckoned the best in Europe. Among the many mineral springs with establishments of baths, the most frequented are those of Kissingen, Brückenau, and Rosenheim.

Manufacturing industry is but little developed in this country. Its principal branch is the brewing of beer, which is much esteemed, and carried on to a vast extent, there being upwards of 5,600 breweries in the kingdom. Linen weaving is carried on to a considerable extent; woollen and cotton are not manufactured in sufficient quantity for home consumption. The other chief manufactures are tanning, paper-making, working in wood and straw, hardware, beet-root sugar, tobacco, and porcelain. The jewellery of Augsburg & München is much esteemed, as are the mathematical and optical instruments of the capital; the tobacco and toys of Nürnberg, the wooden clocks of the Rhöngebirge, the porcelain of the royal manuf. of Nymphenburg, and the pottery of Deggendorf and Hafnerzell, called "Pottery of Passau." Next to Augsburg and Nürnberg, the chief seats of manuf. industry are Ansbach, Bamberg, Fürth, Memmingen, Schweinfurt, & Würzburg.

The commerce of Bavaria is almost exclusively confined to agricultural produce. The exports are estimated at about 1,230,000*l.* annually, and consist of grain, timber, wine, cattle, salt, hides, wool, hops, fruits and fruit-trees, liquorice, madder, butter, cheese, glass, and jewellery. The chief imports are cotton, sugar, coffee, & other colonies, silks & woollen fabrics of fine qualities.

Bavaria has for centuries possessed the transit trade between N. Germany and Austria, Switzerland and Italy. The roads are in general bad, and railways have not yet been extensively constructed in the kingdom. The following table shows their progress to 1848:—

Railways in Operation, 1848.

Nürnberg to Fürth, 5 m. 1835.

(This was the first line opened in Germany).

Augsburg to München, 39 m. 1840.

Augsburg to Donauwörth, 27 m. 1844.

Nürnberg to Bamberg, 33 m. 1847.

Railways in Progress, 1848.

Augsburg to Lindau on the Lake of Constance.

Donauwörth to Nürnberg.

The great routes of navigation are: the Danube and the Rhine, traversed by steam packets, and the Main. The other navigable rivers are: the Inn, the Salzach, Regnitz, and Altmühl. The chief floatable rivers are the Weisse Main, the Rodach, the Iller, Lech, Wertach, Isar, and Loisach. The lines of canal are not extensive, but one of them, the Ludwigs-Kanal, connecting the Rhine and the Danube, is likely to become one of the most important in Europe. [See ALTMÜHL.] Among the establishments most favourable to commerce are the exchange banks of Nürnberg, Ansbach, and München. Bavaria joined the Zoll-Verein (Prussian Commercial Union) in 1833.

Bavaria is a kingdom, and its form of government is a constitutional monarchy. The throne is hereditary in the male line. The constitution dates from 25th May 1818, and no change can take place without the concurrence of the national states. The executive power belongs to the king; the ministers and all functionaries are responsible. The legislative functions are exercised concurrently by the king and the two chambers of the national states, but the royal prerogative is very extensive. Public revenue for the financial period 1843 to 1849 estim. at 31,736,407 florins per ann. Expenditure, including interest of debt, 8,746,294 fl. The kingdom is divided into 2 Catholic archbishoprics, those of München and Bamberg; 6 bishoprics, 171 deaneries, and 2,756 parishes. The direction of the Protestant religion is under a general consistory (Ober-consistorium), and 4 prov. consistories, at Bayreuth, Kreuz-Wertheim, and Spire. The proportion of the different sects was, in 1840, Catholics, 3,067,990; Lutherans & Reformers, 1,239,990; Jews, (1846, 59,292) 63,000; minor sects, 4,450. Public instruction is more limited in Bavaria than in several other German states: it has, however, been much improved of late. Its direction is under the minister of the interior. Elementary schools (Volks schule) exist in all the parishes, and attendance on them is obligatory for children till the age of 14; and after leaving them they are bound for two years more to attend a Sabbath school. The kingdom possesses 3 universities, 2 of which (München & Würzburg) are Catholic, and 1 (Erlangen) Protestant. In 1847 the Univ. of München had 76 professors, and 1,471 students, of whom 125 were foreigners; in 1846-7, Würzburg had 521 students, 72 of whom were foreigners; and Erlangen had, at same date, 364 students, of whom 7 were foreigners. Besides the numerous elementary schools, Bavaria has a school of forests at Aschaffenburg, re-established 1843; a school of husbandry (landswerthschafft) at Schleissheim; a mining school at Steben, a seminary for students, 9 lycæums, 26 gymnasia, 60 Latin schools, 9 normal schools, 3 polytechnic schools, 1 royal school of architecture, 1 school of trades, 22 schools of rural industry, 1 blind, and 1 deaf-dumb school. The capital possesses scientific & literary institutions, & collections of art among the most extensive in Europe, besides important academies and national societies. [MÜNCHEN—MÜNICH.]

The armed force of the kingdom comprises the permanent army, the army of reserve, and the militia (Landwehr). Every male, without exception, is liable to serve; but the sons of the nobility have the privilege of entering the military school of cadets. The army is raised by conscription, and the period of service is four years, from the age of 21 to 25. The permanent army, in time of peace, amounts to 58,239 men, besides 4 companies of veterans, of whom about one-third are usually under arms. In case of war, dépôts are formed for infantry and cavalry. The Landwehr is organized and armed in two levies.

Bavaria, formerly an electorate of the Germanic empire, was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon, at the peace of Presburg, in 1805. As one of the states of the Germ. confed. it had lately one vote in the ordinary assemblies of the diet, where it held the third rank, and four votes in full council. Its military contingent was 35,600 men, forming the 7th corps of the federal army.

Total,	11,313	4,258,486	...

Surface in the N. and W. uniformly flat or slightly undulating. The coasts are low and protected against the encroachments of the sea by dykes and sand downs, as in Holland,—though no part of Flanders is below the sea-level. The centre is undulating, and the S. and E. provs. are mountainous, being traversed by the Ardennes mountains, which enclose the valley of the Meuse, and separate its basin from that of the Moselle, rising to 2,000 feet in elevation. The whole territory belongs to the basin of the German Ocean, and is among the best watered countries of Europe; chief rivers the Meuse (Maas) and Scheldt, with the Rupel, Demer, Senne, Dendre, the Haine, Durme, and the Lys, tribut. to the former; & the Ourthe, Vesdre, & Ambleve, Mark, Dommel, Geer, Mehaigne, and Sambre, affls. of the latter. Climate humid & cool; unhealthy in the low parts of Flanders and in the prov. of Antwerp. Mean temperature of 7 years at Brussels, 50° 4' Fahr.; extreme heat 91° 6' Fahr.; extreme cold minus 3° Fahr.; prevailing wind S.W. The soil is in general fertile, especially so in Flanders; sandy and sterile in great part of the provs. Antwerp and Luxemburg. In the mountainous regions the riches consist in fine forests and abundant mineral products. The country is estimated to yield double the quantity of corn required for home consumption. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, and buck-wheat are extensively cultivated. Potatoes, oil-seeds, madder, flax, and hemp are grown chiefly in Flanders; hops, beet-root, chicory, and tobacco are raised in the central provs. Flanders is famous for its agriculture: (the reader will find elaborate accounts of the husbandry in the different provs. in Macculloch's Geog. Dict. i. 328-332). Only some inferior kinds of wine is produced on the banks of the Meuse. Horticulture is an important branch of industry. Horned cattle are most numerous in Flanders. From 7,000 to 10,000 of the large Flemish draught horses, and about 2,600 colts, are annually exported, principally to France and the Prussian dominions; and within the last 25 years great pains have been taken by the government to improve the road and saddle horses, by crossings with English breeds. English sheep have been imported latterly to improve the native races; but their number is inconsiderable. Pigs are reared in great numbers in the forest regions, and the rearing of the silkworm was established in 1826. Mining is one of the chief sources of wealth; in 1837 there were in the country 352 mines, occupying, or extending under, more than 640 square m.; the principal products are iron, coal, copper, zinc, marble, slate, and stone. Iron is abundant in the countries between the Sambre and Meuse; but Limburg and Luxembourg also furnish a considerable quantity. In the province of Liege the average annual produce was, in 1836, 150,000 tons of iron. Mons, Charleroi, & Liege are the great centres of the coal trade; & in 1845, it is estimated that 4,960,077 tons of coal were raised in Belgium (value 1,660,000L.), being about 1-4th more than was raised in France during the same year. Copper and lead are deficient, but the mines of Moresnet (Liege) furnish more than half the zinc used in Europe. Fishing in the open sea & on the coasts occupies about 200 boats, in the ports of Antwerp, Ostend, Blankenberghe, & Nieuport. Ostend is the princip. port for the herring fishery. Manuf. industry is the chief source of prosperity in Belgium; in this it surpasses every country in Europe, except England. According to a recent census 355,000 persons are employed in Belgium in spinning and weaving, independently of 50,000 more engaged in subsidiary occupations. The manufs. of woollen cloths and cassimeres employed, in 1833, 40,000 hands in and about Verviers; and there were produced annually 100,000 pieces of fine cloth, of an aggregate value of 1,000,000L. At Liege, Mechlin, Hodimont, Ypres, &c., flannels, serges, tickings, & coverlets are made; and carpets are manuf. in nearly all the towns, but especially at Tournay. The linen manuf. is, however, the most ancient and celebrated of the country; and it is estimated that 10,820,000 yards of linen fabrics of various kinds are annually woven in the kingdom. Around Tournay 5,000 stocking-frames are employed. In 1840 about 50,000 persons were employed in cotton manufs., of which Ghent, St. Nicholas, Antwerp, Turnhout, Mechlin, and Lierre, are the chief seats. The value of the cotton goods produced in the same year, was estimated at 1,600,000L. Silk fabrics; lace at Brussels, Mechlin, &c.; embroidery, ribands, hosiery, hats, leather, paper, oil-cloth, hair, & caoutchouc articles, are also very important manufs.; and cabinet-making, printing, lithography, and bookbinding are well conducted in Belgium. In 1839, 69 smelting furnaces, and 175 iron forges were in active operation, the principal being at Liege, where the royal cannon foundry is one of the best estab. of the kind in Europe. Steam engines are built at Liege, Brussels, Charleroi, Tirlemont, and Bruges; nail-making employs from 12,000 to 13,000 hands; fire-arms are made at Liege, and exported to Brazil, Germany, Italy, Spain, and the East; and cutlery (superior to that of France and Germany), is manufd. in Namur, Brussels, and Ghent. Next to these, the most important manufs. are leather, paper, glass, & porcelain, beet-root sugar, salt, chemical goods, bronze wares, scientific and musical instruments, hardwares; and jewellery at Liege and Antwerp. Typography, the chief seat of which is Brussels, is carried to great perfection. It is chiefly supported by the re-production of French works, which are printed annually to the value of 10,000,000 francs. Belgium is the only country in Europe which possesses a complete system of railways. These originated in a law of 1st March 1834, & were executed by the government; they centre in Mechlin, whence they diverge N. to the Scheldt, E. to the Prussian frontier, S. to the French frontier, and W. to the German Ocean. The whole territory is intersected by canals, many of which admit merchant vessels, and the great roads are among the finest in Europe. In 1842 the general imports into Belgium amounted in value to 288,387,663fr. (11,535,506l.) They comprised coffee, cotton, wool, hides, salt, raw sugar, tobacco, woollen and silk stuffs, wines, timber, cattle, indigo, resins, and metals. Exports in same year, to the value of 201,970,588fr. (8,078,823l.), consisted in hempen and linen cloths, glass wares, refined sugar, corn, cattle, skins, woollen fabrics, iron and nails, oil, seeds, flax, and machinery. A considerable amount of the foreign merchandise imported passes through the country into Germany, &c. The native shipping of Belgium is not nearly adequate to the extent of her commerce; in 1840 the total number of merchant ships registered was only 161, of an aggregate burden of 22,770 tons, and of these 7 were steam-vessels, burden 1,048 tons. Antwerp, Ostend, and Nieuport, are the chief ports.

Government is a constitutional monarchy, based on the broadest principles of rational liberty. The sovereignty is hereditary, except in failure of heirs male; the senate and the house of representatives are both elected by the people. Total reg. electors in 1842, 49,313. Punishment of death has been abolished; universal toleration, freedom of the press, and trial by jury are established. (Numerous particulars respecting the constitution will be found detailed in McCulloch's Geog. Dict. i. 344.) The pop. is almost wholly Roman Catholic; but the clergy of all sects are supported by the State. Each prov. has its governor, a council of from 50 to 70 members, and a court of assize; and in most of the large manuf. towns is now a council des prudhommes. Each arrond. has a court of primary jurisdiction, and each canton a police tribunal. Courts of appeal are established in Brussels, Ghent, and Liege; and the whole are subordinate to a court of cassation in Brussels. The kingdom has 4 universities, the seats of which are Ghent, Liege, Louvain, and Brussels; in most of the cities are diocesan seminaries; in many high schools, termed gymnasias; and Belgium is remarkable for her public libraries, fourteen in number. The compulsory system of education in force under the Dutch rule was abolished by the Belgians in 1830, and the amount of public instruction is much less than previously; but in each commune is a primary school, and the average number receiving instruction in 1836 was as 1 to 10 of the pop. Each commune has its bureau of charity for the permanent relief of the poor and numerous hospitals and asylums are established in the principal cities and towns. Belgium has 22 fortified places; the armed force in 1847 amounted to 180,000 men, of whom 90,000 belonged to the troops of the line, and 90,000 to the civic or burgher guard. Public revenue (1846), 4,620,163l.; expenditure, 4,508,969l.; public debt, 37,883,237l. Belgium successively formed part of the doms. of Austria and Spain from the 15th century until 1795, when it was conquered by the French. It remained annexed to Holland from 1815 to 1830, in the autumn of which year it acquired its independence, after a revolution of a very few days.

BELGORON, a town of Russia, gov. and 72 m. S. Kursk, on the Donetz. Pop. 10,318. It is divided into an old and a new town, is an archbp.'s see, and has numerous churches, &c.; & manufs. of leather.

BELGRADE, Singidunum, an important fortified city of Servia, on r. b. of the Danube, at the confluence of the Save, 44 m. S.E. Peterwardein; lat. 44° 47' 57" N., lon. 20° 28' 14" E. Pop. 30,000. It is the largest and best built city of Servia, and one of the strongest places in Europe, being garrisoned by 6,000 Turks. The citadel, occupied by the Turkish pasha and troops, is on the tongue of land between the rivs., behind which rises the city proper, with antique-looking German edifices, a new cathedral, a palace, and barracks. The Turkish quarter, with the old palace of Prince Eugene, slopes down to the Danube; the Servian quarter, with the custom-ho. and consular residence, borders on the Save, which is lined by a good quay, and rows of mod. houses. Belgrade had formerly quite an oriental appearance, but it is becoming abandoned by wealthy Turks; churches are superseding mosques; new buildings are being constructed in the German fashion; and the bazaars have now glazed shop-windows. The streets, however, remain filthy, ill-paved, and not lighted, and the public baths and inns are wretched. It has manufs. of arms, carpets, silk goods, cutlery, and saddlery; with a tolerable port, an increasing general trade, a new lyceum, and several schools; it is the entrepôt of commerce between Turkey and Austria, and the seat of the principal authorities of Servia. It was taken by the Turks, under Selyman II., in 1522; and re-taken by Prince Eugene in 1717. It was partly ruined during the Servian insurrection in 1813, and its repair was commenced by the Porte in 1836.—II. a town of European Turkey, Rumili, 13 miles N. BELOCHISTAN (Gedrosia, and the countries of the Orite, Ichthyophagi, &c.), an extensive country of Southern Asia, forming the S.E. part of the old dom. of Persia, between lat. 24° 50' and 30° 20' N., and lon. 67° 40' and 69° 18' E.; having E. Scinde, N. Afghanistan, N.W. and W. the Persian desert; & extending on the S. for 600 m. along the shores of the Indian Ocean. Estim. area 160,000 sq. m., & pop. 480,000. It is subdiv. into the 6 provs. of Kelat, Sarawan, Cutch-Gundava, Jhalawan, Lus, & Mekran. Nearly the whole country is mountainous, except in the N.W. & along the coast, its general characteristics being a rugged and elevated surface, barrenness, and deficiency of water. Its mntns. in the E. are connected with those of South Afghanistan, & rise to considerable elevation; the Bolan Pass, and even the bottom of some valleys are upwards of 5,700 feet in height, & the cap. Kelat is 6,000 ft. above the sea. In the N., the peak of Takkatoo is considered to have an elev. of 11,000 ft. The rivs. are very insignificant, except after heavy rains; the largest, the Duste, though supposed to have a course of 1,000 m., has been found at its mouth only 20 inches deep, and 20 yards in width. The climate is exceedingly varied, being cold in the elevated parts, and excessively hot in the lower valleys. In the low and watered plains of Cutch-Gundava & Lus, rice & sugar-cane, with cotton, indigo, and tobacco are raised; in other parts, wheat, barley, madder, and pulses, with European fruits, melous, pomegranates, rhubarb, and assafoetida are the principal products; on some of the mountain sides, the tamarisk and babool attain the size of large timber trees. In the wide sandy desert of Mekran, where the returning army of Alexander the Great suffered its severest hardships, the date is the only valuable product. Pastures are generally poor, and cattle few; but a good many sheep and goats are kept, the pursuits of the people being mostly pastoral. The Bactrian (or two-humped) camel, and the dromedary, are used as beasts of burden; in the N.W. some good horses are bred. The strata about Kelat and Moostung, as well as other explored localities, consist of secondary limestone, sandstone, and conglomerates; and the N.W. extremity shows indication of volcanic action. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, antimony, iron, sulphur, alum, and sal-ammoniac, but these are turned to little account. Prepared skins, woollen felt and cloths, carpets and tent-covers of goats' or camels' hair, and rude fire-arms, are all the manufd. products. Trade comparatively small, and almost monopolized by Hindoos. Sonneanee is the only seaport; its custom dues were, in 1840, farmed for 3,400*l.* Principal exports, butter or ghee, hides, wool, a few drugs, dried fruits, fish, a little corn, & vegetable oil; imports, British and Indian manufs., rice, spices, dye-stuffs, and slaves for Muscat. The pop. consists mainly of Belooches and Brahooses, two races very different in personal appearance, but both Mohammedans of the Sonnee sect, and who, like the Afghans, are subdivided into numerous tribes or clans, each under its own chief. Mekran is in barbarous anarchy; most of the E. provs. are under the uncertain authority of the khan of Kelat, whose rev. is estim. at 30,000*l.* annually, and his armed force at 3,000 men. Lus is ruled by a vassal of this chieftain. A late khan of Kelat having acted with much treachery toward the British, during their advance into Afghanistan in 1839, his cap. was stormed & taken by our troops on the 13th of Nov. in that year. In the following year it changed hands, and it was again captured and temporarily held by the British in 1841.

It is the cap. of a division of the Bengal presid., and of above dist., on the l. b. of the Ganges, 390 m. N.W. Calcutta, and 420 m. S.E. Delhi. Lat. of observatory 25° 18' 33" N., lon. 82° 55' 52" E. Stationary pop. estimated at 600,000?; but at certain festivals the number is incredible, this city being "most holy," & resorted to by pilgrims from all parts of India, and even from Tibet and Burmah. Its external appearance is highly imposing; it stretches for 4 m. along the riv., from which ascend many handsome ghauts, or flights of stone steps. Streets very narrow; buildings lofty. In 1801 there were estimated to be 12,000 brick or stone houses, from 1 to 6 stories in height, built around courtyards, ornamented with much painting & carving, many of the largest containing 200 inhabs. in each, besides 16,000 mud-built dwellings, with tiled roofs. Principal edifices, the great mosque of Aurungzebe, numerous other mosques, a great number of Hindoo temples, an anc. observatory, and the Hindoo Sanscrit college, the chief seat of native learning in India. At Seroli, a little to the E., is a tope, now ruined, but originally similar to those in the Punjab. (MANIKYALA.) Among its inhabs. are many wealthy native bankers, and dealers in diamonds, for which gems the city is famous; and Benares has a large trade in shawls, muslins, silks, cottons, and fine woollens of its own manuf., and in European goods, salt, indigo, opium. It is the seat of a British court of circuit and appeal, an English college established in 1832, and numerous Christian missions, and Mohammedan and Hindoo schools.

BENGAL, Bangala, a presidency and prov. of British India. It is by far the largest of the three presidencies into which India is divided, comprising, with Agra, about a fourth of the whole area of Hither-India, together with the later ceded provinces beyond the Ganges. The territory extends between lat. 20° and 31° N., & lon. 74° and 91° E., bounded on the N. by Nepal Sikkim, and Bootan, on the E. by the dists. adjoining the Burmese dominion, on the S. by Bay of Bengal, the territs. of Berar, Indore, Gwalior, and on the W. by the Rajpoot and Sikh principalities. This great region is divided into the Upper or Western provs., including Delhi, and all that portion W. of lon 80°; the central, including Allahabad, Bahar, and others, as far E. as lon. 87°; and the lower containing the remaining territory to the S. and E. The following table exhibits the divisions, area, and population:—

The greater proportion of this territ. consists of the immense plain or valley of the Ganges. To the N. this plain rises into the mountainous region of Kumaon, and on the S. are the Vindhyan mntns., and the table land of central India. The river Ganges flows in a S.E. direction, through the whole extent of the presidency, and is joined in its course by numerous tributaries, of which the Jumna, Chumbul, Goggra, Gunduck, & Sone, are the most considerable. The eastern division of the country is traversed by the Brahmaputra, which discharges its waters into the Bay of Bengal near the confluence of the Ganges. Both these great rivs. divide into numerous branches before reaching the sea, & their united deltas form a tract of rich alluvial soil, exceeding 30,000 sq. m. in extent. There are no inland lakes, but numerous lagoons and marshes, especially in the lower dists. The surface of the country generally exhibits a deep clay alluvium, interspersed with sandy tracts, with tertiary deposits in some localities. Approaching the Himalayan range to the N., are granitic and porphyritic rocks, with secondary limestone and sandstones; N.W. are basaltic and greenstone rocks. The Vindhyan and Garrow chains of mtns. are of volcanic origin. Nitre is found in great quantities in Bahar, as well as common salt, both of which are largely exported. Salt is a government monopoly, & in 1841 its sale realized 1,925,000*l*. Diamonds are found in a conglomerate in Bundelcund; and gold dust and silver are in some of the rivers. Coal and iron are found in Sylhet and Burdwan. The mean annual temperature of the plains is, for Calcutta and Benares, from 78° to 79° Fahr., at Delhi 73° Fahr. During the winter months in Kumaon there is heavy frost and snow. In Bengal the rainy season commences in June, and continues till the middle of October. The ann. fall of rain is from 70 to 80 inches. The winter, or cold season, lasts from November to middle of February, when the hot season begins & continues till the middle of June. During the rainy season the lower provs. especially are overflowed by the Ganges and its tributaries. Hence these dists. are highly favourable to the cultivation of rice, which is here the principal product of the soil. In the upper dists. wheat and barley are the principal crops. Indigo is largely cultivated from Dacca to Delhi, there being upwards of 400 indigo factories in the presidency. Its culture occupies more than a million of acres, and its annual produce is estimated to be worth from 2,000,000*l*. to 3,000,000*l*. sterling, half of which amount is yearly expended in its production. Opium is a government monopoly, and is cultivated only in Bahar and Benares, where the produce is considered equal, if not superior, to the opium of Malwah. The quantity of Patna and Benares opium disposed of at the public sales in the year 1843-4 amounted in value to 2,282,780*l*. Cotton is a staple crop; and the soil in Benares is capable of producing sugar equal to that of the W. Indies. Coffee, pepper, and tobacco are raised, and most of the spice and fruit trees of Asia, have been acclimated somewhere in this wide region. The forests contain teak, saul, sissou, banyan, ebony, oak, and pine timber, with rattans, bamboos, cocoa, areca, and other palms. A great quantity of silk is produced in Bengal-proper, between lat. 22° and 26°, and lon. 86° and 90°. Elephants' teeth, and hides of various kinds, form important articles of trade. Nitre is obtained principally in Bahar prov., and that exported from Calcutta in 1841-2, amounted to 611,572 maunds, worth 321,073*l*. Muslins, cotton piece goods, diaper, pack-thread, sailcloth, chintzes, silks, calicoes, blanketing, and other woven goods, are staple manufs.; but, of late years, they have begun to be superseded by fabrics from Europe. For expts. and impts. see CALCUTTA. The gov. is vested in the Governor-General of India, and a Council of five mems., three appointed by the E. I. Company, a fourth also appointed by the Company, but not one of their number, and the fifth the Commander-in-chief. The upper provs. are under a lieut.-gov. at Agra, subordinate to the gov.-general at Calcutta. In each district or collectorate is a judge, empowered to decide appeals originating in the district, and to try civil suits to the amount of 2,000*l*. Superior to these tribunals are courts of appeal in Calcutta, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Patna, Benares, and Bareilly; and a supreme court sits in Calcutta, from which there is appeal only to the British sovereign in council. In the upper provs. the land rev. is collected for the government by officers appointed under the native village system of India; in the lower provs. the zemindars, or hereditary tax-collectors, constituted proprietors of the soil by Lord Cornwallis' Act, account to the gov. for 9-10ths of the sums they collect as rent, and reserve the remaining 1-10th for their own remuneration. [INDIA.] Numerous schools for the natives have been established by government throughout the presidency, and colleges at Calcutta, Delhi, Agra, Benares, besides several missionary stations and schools for the religious instruction of the natives. The pop. of this presid. embraces a great variety of races,—Hindoos of all castes, Moguls, Mahrattas, Sikhs, Rajpoots, peculiar wild tribes in Gundwanah, and Bhagul-pore; and beyond the Brahmputra, Mughs, Garrows, and other races differing widely from those of W. Asia. The prevailing religions are the Brahminical and Mohammedan; Buddhism is confined to the countries E. of the Brahmputra; and the hill tribes have rude paganisms of their own. The Protestant establ. consists of an archdeacon and about forty chaplains, subordinate to the bp. of Calcutta; there is also a small establ. for the Scotch kirk. The Roman Catholic establ. is under the vic. apostolic of Agra, and a legate at Calcutta, both subordinate to the Roman Catholic bp. at Madras. Public rev. is derived from the land-tax, & subsidies from protected native states; mint, post-office, stamp, & excise duties; a house-tax in Calcutta, judicial fees and fines, sayar and abkarry duties, customs, pilotage, monopoly of salt and opium, &c.: total receipts (1842-3), 9,445,818*l*.; expenditure, 1,628,751*l*.; net rev., 7,817,067*l*. Principal cities, Calcutta, the cap. of British India; Delhi, the Mohammedan cap.; Benares, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Bahar, Patna, Allahabad, Agra. Calcutta was erected into a presid. separate from Madras in 1707; in 1765, the English acquired by treaty the sovereignty over the provs. Bengal, Bahar, and a part of Orissa; and in 1773, the residence of the Governor-general of India was fixed in Bengal. The principal accessions of territory since have been Benares, in 1775; Oude dists., 1801; Delhi territ., 1805; Kumaon, 1815; S. W. (Nerhudda) dists., 1818; Singapore and Malacca, 1824; and the Berar dists. and Burmese ceded provs. in 1826.—Bengal Province, one of the largest and most important of the old Mohammedan provs. of Hindostan, between lat. 21° and 27° N., and lon. 87° and 92° N. It comprises the delta of the Ganges, with the lower course of the Brahmputra, and is traversed by numerous other rivers, its surface being mostly a dead level. It is wholly included in the British dom., and forms under the above presidency the divisions of its three principal cities, Calcutta, Moorshedabad, and Dacca, which are subdivided into numerous subordinate districts.

* The amount of pop. in most of the dists. under the 4 first divisions (the provs. Bengal and Bahar) have been derived from a census taken in 1837-8: those of the 5th and 6th divisions, comprising the subdivisions of Benares, Allahabad, Agra, Rohilconda, Meerat, and Delhi, from a return for 1840-7.

BENGAL (BAY OF), Gangeticus Sinus, a part of the Indian Ocean, extending between Hither and Further India, including the sea from Cape Negrais on the E., to the delta of the Godavery on the W., betw. lat. 16° 30' and 23° N. Its chief affls. are the Ganges, including the Brahmputra, and the Godavery. The sea of Bengal, which is sometimes described as part of the bay, extends to lat. 8° N., between the islands of Ceylon and Junkseylon. Depth 4 to 60 faths. from the delta to a distance of 100 m.; 30 m. from the coast, a circular space 15 m. in diameter, has no soundings at 100 or 130 fathoms.

BENGAZI, Berenice, a marit. town of N. Africa, Barca, on the Gulf of Sidra (anc. Syrtis Major), 420 m. E.S.E. Tripoli. Lat. 32° 6' 8" N., lon. 20° 2' 7" E. Pop. about 2,500. It is finely situated in a fertile plain, but is miserably built, and filthy; and its port is shallow. It has a castle, the residence of a bey; and some trade with Barbary and Malta, in wool, oxen, sheep, salted butter, and corn; in 1839 its exports are stated to have amounted in value to 22,188*l.*, and its imports 32,000*l.* Near this city were the "gardens of the Hesperides," and traces of anc. buildings are often met with buried in the sand.

BENGUELA, a marit. country of W. Africa, nominally claimed by Portugal, between lat. 9° and 16° S., and lon. 12° and 17° (?) E., having N. Angola, from which it is separated by the river Coanza; and W. the S. Atlantic. Surface mountainous, and rises progressively inland by a series of terraces. Principal rivs. have all a W. course. The climate is very unhealthy, and fever is prevalent. The therm. varies from 94° to 105° Fahr. in the shade at noon. The soil is well watered, and very productive; little corn is raised, but tropical fruits, European vegetables, and cattle are abundant, and numerous fine turtles are obtained on the sea coast. Mineral products comprise copper, sulphur, petroleum, and gold. Among the natives here, are the Giagas, a race of fierce savages, whose incursions are much dreaded by the Portuguese. Fétichism is the prevailing superstition. Beasts of prey, including the lion and hyena, are numerous. The government of the prov. is under the immediate control of the gov.-general of Loando. New Benguela, Novo Redondo, &c., on the coast, and a few stations in the interior, are occupied by the Portuguese, whose rule, however, extends little, if at all, beyond those settlements.

BENGUELA (NEW, or ST PHILIP DE), a seaport town, and the Portuguese cap. of above country, with a noble harbour on the Atlantic, near the river Catumbella. Lat. 12° 33' 9" S., lon. 13° 25' 2" E. Pop. 3,000, of whom one-third are whites and mulattoes. Its principal inhabs. are slave dealers, and their iniquitous trade is so flourishing that, in 1838, nearly 20,000 slaves were exported. Morality is at the lowest ebb, and there is no school of instruct. in the town; which is sit. in a charming and very fertile valley. The streets are straight and wide, but contain more ruined than inhabited houses; they are mostly built of clay and palm branches. The ruins of Old Benguela, the original cap. of the country, are situated on the coast, 130 m. N.N.E. New Benguela.

BENHALL, a pa. of England, co. Suffolk,  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.W. Saxmundham. Area 2,010 ac. Pop. 749.

A tract of downs extends through its centre; its S.E. and E. parts are occupied by Windsor forest and park. About 260,000 acres are estim. to be under tillage; 72,000 do. in pastures; and 30,000 do. waste. The soil is fertile, sub-soil chalk, gravel, and clay. Agriculture is rather backward; though many parts of the co., especially in the vales of the Kennet and the "White-horse," are noted for fertility. Property greatly subdivided. Few farms consist of more than 500 ac. Average rent of land about 25*s.* an ac. Manufs. unimportant: those of woollens, for which the co. was once famous, have entirely disappeared; but an extensive trade in agricultural produce is carried on by the Thames, the Wilts and Berks, and Kennet and Avon canals, and the G. Western railw., which last intersects the co. throughout. Chf. towns, Reading, Windsor, Wallingford, Abingdon, and Newbury. Berks contains 20 hundreds, and 151 pas. in the circuit & diocese of Oxford. Poor-rates (1845) 78,178*l.*; co. rates (1847) 10,982*l.*; expenditure 10,220*l.*; annual value of land (1843), 594,903*l.*; of houses, 310,104*l.*; total annual value of property, 967,475*l.* It returns 9 mems. to the H. of C., 3 of whom sit for the co. Reg. elects. for co. (1846), 5,241.

BERLENGAS (Fr. Berlingues), a group of small rocky isls. off the W. coast of Portugal, prov. Estremadura, 10 m. N.W. Peniche. The small island Berlinga is defended by a fortress.

BERLIKUM, a vill. of the Netherlands, prov. N. Brabant, 5 m. E. Bois-le-Duc. Pop. 2,222.—II. another vill. of same name, prov. W. Friesland, has a large annual fair. Pop. 1,220.

BERLIN, an important city of Germany, cap. of the Prussian monarchy, and of the prov. Brandenburg, on the Spree, 156 m. E.S.E. Hamburg, and 100 m. N. Dresden. Lat. (of new Observatory) 52° 30' 16" N., lon. 13° 23' 58" E.; elev. above the sea 115 ft.; mean temp. of the year 48°. 2; summer 64°. 5; winter 31°. 4 Fahr. Pop. (1846), including garrison, 408,500. It is built in a sandy plain, on both banks of the Spree, is about 10 m. in circumference, occupies an extent of 6,800 acres, & is one of the finest and most handsomely constructed cities in Europe. The chief divisions of the city are, 1. Berlin Proper, 2. Cologne (alt and neu Köln), on the Spree; 3. Louisenstadt, in the S.; 4. Friedrichstadt, in S.W.; 5. Friedrichswerder, betw. alt and neu Köln and Friedrichstadt; 6. Neustadt, or Dorotheenstadt, betw. Friedrichstadt and the Spree; 7. Friedrich Wilhelmstadt, built 1828, and the suburbs of Stralhan, Spandau, and Königstadt, Oranienburg, and Potsdam. The city is surrounded by a wall 16 feet high, and is entered by 16 gates, one of which, the Brandenburg gate on its W., is a colossal structure, surmounted by a victory, in a car drawn by 4 horses, and one of the most elegant of the kind in Europe. It was carried to Paris in 1807, and restored in 1814. Of the 40 bridges which cross the Spree and its branches, the principal are the long bridge, with an equest. statue of the great elector Frederick William; the Schlossbrücke, or palace bridge, with groups of heroes in marble; Frederick's bridge, consisting of eight arches, and constructed of iron. The city generally is regular and handsome, but the houses are of little elevation. The finest streets are in Fried. and Dorotheen stadt; the most celeb. is that called 'Unter-der-Linden,' a broad & imposing street, planted with 4 rows of lime trees, ornamented by an equest. statue of Fred. the Great, terminat. by the Brandenburg gate at the one end, & the royal palace at the other. Other streets most worthy of notice are Friedrich st., Wilhelm st., Paris square, Wilhelms place, Belle Alliance place, & the Gens-d'Armes market. Around the principal squares & streets are grouped numerous public buildings, among which are the royal castle & palace, the arsenal, university, museums, exchange, opera-house, theatres, and the palaces of the princes. There are 33 churches, of which 23 are evangelical, 4 French Calvinist, 2 Rom. Catholic, and 1 chapel of the Bohemian brothers. The cathed. in the Lustgarten is the finest, but none of them are remarkable for their architecture. The Prussian capital has nums. and excellent hôtels and cafés, and its public conveyances are under the best management. In summer, upwards of 1,000 droskeys are kept in the streets for hire. The suburbs have many attractions, among which are the Thier-garten, a large open park outside of the Brandenburg gate, in which a 'corso' has been recently estab., and the Kreutzberg, a sandhill, S. of the gate of Halle, on which is erected an iron monument to the memory of the Prussians who fell in the wars of Napoleon, and whence the only good view of the city is obtained. Berlin is the great centre of instruction and intellectual development in Northern Germany; its educational estabs. are numerous and celebrated. The university, founded in 1809, & comprising schools of jurisprudence, medicine, and philosophy, had, in 1843-4, 1,656 students. There are 6 gymnasia, 2 Protestant theol. seminaries, a milit. school, schools of artillery, military engineering, architecture, sculpture, painting, and music; a preparatory school of music, and many elementary schools. It has extens. public libraries, among which the royal library, founded in 1650, has 600,000 printed vols. & 500 MSS. Among its valuable collections are royal museums of painting, sculpture, antiquities, coins, & medals, a museum of nat. hist., a royal astronom. & magnet. observatory, & a royal hotanic garden, one of the richest & most complete in Europe. Its justly celeb. academic institutions comprise the acad. of sciences (Akademie der Wissenschaften), acad. of the fine arts, acad. for the encouragement of industry, and the acad. of music; a geographical society, founded in 1828, and a society of natural history. It has 2 royal theatres; & its celeb. opera house, burned in 1843, was rebuilt in 1844. Among its charitable institutions are the Hôtel des Invalides, for 300 soldiers & 12 officers, and an orphan hospital. Berlin is the first city in Germany for the variety and importance of its manuf. products. The different articles of indust. are cloths, linens, carpets, silks, ribbons, and printed cottons, iron wares, especially the beautiful cast-iron articles called "Berlin jewellery," paper, porcelain, mathem. & optical instruments, chem. & dye-stuffs, includg. the celeb. "Prussian blue," & musical instruments. Among its great industrial estabs. are the royal iron foundry and royal porcelain manufactory. The productions of the press in typography, cartography, & lithography, are numerous and excellent. For the encouragement of commerce there is a royal bank, a royal mercantile marine (Seehandlungs-institute), established 1772, & steam-packet companies. All the great roads in the kingdom meet in Berlin; its position, on a navig. river, communicating by canals with the Elbe, Oder, and Vistula, renders its navigation of considerable importance; and it is now (1850) the centre of a system of railways which connect it with the Baltic by Hamburg & Kiel, on the N.W., and by Stettin on the N.E. On the S.E. a line extends by Breslau to Vienna, on the S. to Leipzig and Dresden, and on the W. to Magdeburg and Hanover. The origin of the city dates from the 13th cent., but it first became important in the reign of the great elector Fred. William, in 1650. In 1700, its pop. amounted to only 29,000. Berlin was occup. by the Austrians and Russians in 1760, & by the French in 1806.

BERLIN, a tshp. of the U. S., N. Amer., Connecticut co., & 10 m. S.W. Hartford. Pop. 3,411, partly empl. in a manuf. of tin wares.—Also a town, Rensselaer co. N. York. P. 1,794, & sev. others.

BERMONDSEY, a pa. of England, & suburb of the metropolis, co. Surrey, included in the borough of Southwark, on the E. Area 620 ac. Pop. 22,496, mostly employed in ship-building, in extensive tanneries, & in a large retail trade. Bermondsey has 2 chapels for its large Roman Catholic population, a convent, many schools and other charities, and some small remains of a celebrated abbey, founded about A. D. 1082.

BERMUDA, THE BERMUDAS, OR SOMERS ISLS., a group of about 300 small isls. belonging to Great Britain, in the Atlantic, lat. 32° 20' N., and lon. 64° 50' W., 800 m. E. from South Carolina. Area about 20 sq. m., or from 12,000 to 13,000 ac. Pop. (1842), 9,930. Surface mostly low, & composed of a shelly coralline rock. Many rocky reefs surround the Bermudas, which are visited by severe gales in winter; but among the isls. are several good anchorages. Climate mild and salubrious. Mean ann. temp. 71° to 75° Fahr. Principal exports—arrow-root, cocoa, potatoes, onions, palmetto, & straw-hats. The fruits of both tropical & temperate regions are raised; poultry & veal are plentiful. Many of the inhabs. are engaged in the transit & other trade between Newfoundland and the West Indies; and others in the whale-fishery. Value of exports (1844), 34,589*l.*, those to Great Britain amounting to 12,291*l.*; value of imports in do., 141,571*l.*, of which those from the United kingdom amounted to 50,872*l.* In the same year 133 vessels, more than 2-8ds British, aggreg. burden 24,177 tons, entered; and 180 do., bur. 23,290 tons, cleared from the ports of these isls. Reg. shipping (1846), 3,525 tons. St George's and Ireland isls. are strongly fortified; on the former is Hamilton, the cap., & the latter is entirely occup. by its fortress, arsenal, & dockyards. It is the great convict station. Governm. vested in a governor, a council of 8 mems., and an assembly of 36 mems., 4 being returned by each pa. Total publ. rev. (1842) 19,342*l.*; expend. 17,435*l.* The princip. isls. are St George, Ireland, St David, Somerset, Paget, Longbend, & Smith's. This group of isls. was discovered in 1522 by Bermudez, a Spaniard; Sir G. Somers was wrecked here in 1609, & soon after this they were colonised from Virginia and Engl. There is regular steam communic. between Bermuda & New York, and Bermuda and St. Thomas.

BERNE, OR BERNE (CANTON), a state of central Europe, one of the three Vorort, or governing cantons of the Swiss confederation, sit. between lat. 46° 20' & 47° 30' N., & lon. 6° 50' & 8° 27' E. Bounded N. by France, E. by the cants. Soleure, Aargau, Lucern, Unterwalden, and Uri, S. by the Valais, and W. by Vaud, Fribourg, & Neuchatel. Area 2,584 sq. m. Pop. (1837) 407,913, the greater part of whom are protestants. The country is very mntnous., comprising, in the S., many of the highest points of the Alps, as the Finster-aar-Horn, Jungfrau, Schreckhorn, and Mönch, the terraces and contre-forts of which form the Bernese Oberland, celeb. for the beauty of its valleys, the chief of which are the Simmenthal, Lauterbrunnen, Grindelwald, & Hasli. The N. part of the cant. is covered by the Jura mntns., the two regions being separated by the valley of the Aar. Nearly the whole territory belongs to the basin of the Rhine, & is drained by the Aar and its tributaries, the chief of which are the Emmen, Simmen, Kander, and Thiele. The lakes of Neuchatel and Bienne are formed by the Thiele, and those of Thun and Brienz by the Aar. Climate healthy; excessively cold in the region of the Alps, where the perpetual snow forms the most extensive glaciers in Switzerland, but mild at the foot of the Jura, and in the valley of Interlaken. The mntns. are covered with extensive forests of pine and beech, and the soil is fertile in the valleys. The amount of grain, potatoes, hemp, and lint, is insufficient for consumption. The vine is cultivated to a considerable extent in the valleys of the Thiele, and on the lakes Neuchatel, Bienne, and Thun. Pasturage extensive, and the rearing of cattle is the chief source of wealth; those of the valleys of the Emmen and Sarine being considered the best in Switzerland, and the celeb. cheese there produced, is one of the chief articles of commerce in the canton. The horses of the Emmenthal are much esteemed. The canton has mines of iron, lead, and copper, marble & gypsum quarries, fine freestone, granite, and lime. Iron is worked extensively in the Jura. Among the many mineral springs, those of Weissenburg, Blumenstein, Frutigen, and Gurnigel, are most frequented. The chief objects of industry are the manufs. of linens & woollens, iron and copper wares, watchmaking, and the wooden wares of the Oberland. The chief impts. are salt, colonial prod., grain, tobacco, & metals. The cant. is traversed by excellent roads, & steam packets ply on the lakes, and on the riv. Aar. The educational estab. of the canton are numerous and excellent, comprising a university, polytechnic and normal schools, and the celeb. agricultural and industrial institution at Hofwyl. Bern is the largest canton of the Swiss confed., and holds the second rank in the federal diet. Its contingent to the army is 5,824 men.

BERN, a town of Switzerl., cap. cant. of same name, on a small peninsula formed by the Aar, here crossed by two stone bridges, one of which, opened 1844, is 900 ft. in length, 80 m. N.E. Geneva, and 23 m. S. Basel. Elev. (of observ.) 1856 ft. Pop. (1837) 22,422. Bern is the seat of the federal diet, alternately with Zurich and Lucern, and residence of three foreign ministers. It is the finest town in Switzerland, and one of the most handsome in Europe; it is entirely built of freestone, & is remarkable for the arcades formed by the houses in all its principal streets, and for its numerous fountains, many of which are ornamented with curious sculpture. It has a Gothic cathed., a university founded 1834, an observatory, a public library, with an extensive collection of books and MSS. on Swiss history; a museum of natural history, an arsenal, a mint, in which the coins of sev. cantons are struck, and many charitable institutions. Its chief industry consists in the manufacture of gunpowder, firearms, and mathematical instruments, straw hats, paper, and leather. Bern was surrounded by walls in 1191, declared a free city in 1218, & admitted into the Swiss confederation in 1352; its fortifications were demolished in 1835. It is the birthplace of Haller. Bears have for many centuries been maintained here at the public expense, and the effigy of bruin is a favourite emblem on the coins and fountains of the canton.

BERNARD (GREAT ST.), Mont Jovis, a remark. mntn. pass in the chain of the Alps, between Piedmont & the Valais. It owes its mod. name to the great celebrity of the hospice, said to have been founded by Bernard de Menthon, in 862, for the succour of travellers, who have been assisted to the number of 600 in one day. The hospice, a strong stone building, is situated on the summit of the pass, 11 m. N.N.W. Aosta, & 17 m. S.S.E. Martigny, at an elev. of 8,150 ft. above the level of the sea. It is the highest habitation in the Alps, and the cold is so intense, that a small lake in its vicinity is frozen over 9 months in the year. During the whole year, the philanthropic inmates, monks of the order of St. Augustine, with their valuable dogs, hold themselves in readiness to assist travellers arrested by the snow, which in winter accumulates to a depth of from 10 to 40 ft. In the chapel is a monument to General Desaix, erected by Napoleon in 1805. This gorge, which was traversed by Roman armies, by Charlemagne, & by Frederic Barbarossa, is chiefly celeb. for the passage of Bonaparte at the head of the French army of 30,000 men, with cavalry & artillery, 15th to 21st May 1800. The road has been recently much improved, and rendered passable for cars. Little St. Bernard, is a mntn. of the Graian Alps, S. of Mont Blanc, elev. of convent 7,076 feet.

BERWICK-ON-TWEED, a fortified seaport town, munic. and parl. borough, & pa. of England, co. Northumberland, on the N. bank of the Tweed, at its mouth, and on the North British railway, 47 m. E.S.E. Edinburgh. Lat. of lighthouse, 55° 46' N., lon. 1° 59' W. Area of pa. 5,120 ac. Pop. of do. 8,484; of parl. borough 12,578. The town is surrounded by a wall and fortifications. It is connected with its suburbs, Tweedmouth and Spittal, by a stone bridge of 15 arches, built in the reign of Charles I. A splendid new bridge now conducts the North British railway across the Tweed. It has an indifferent harbour, sheltered by a long pier; a decorated Gothic church, built during the commonwealth; many dissenting chapels; a town hall, with an exchange and jail attached, a governor's residence, pauper lunatic asylum, theatre, grammar school, free schools, supported by the corporation, assembly rooms, public subscription library, with 5,000 volumes, and infantry barracks. An iron foundry here, at which steam-engines and mill machinery are built, employed lately from 60 to 70 hands; manufs. of sailcloth, cordage, and linen fabrics, are carried on, and near the town are several coal mines. Berwick has a considerable trade with Norway and the Baltic, whence it imports timber, staves, bones, iron, hemp, tallow, and oil. Exports to London, Leith, Newcastle, and Hull, consist chiefly of agricultural produce, wool, ale, whisky, coal, and fish, especially salmon,—its fishery of which in the Tweed is still very productive. Aggregate burden of vessels entering the port, in 1844, 49,174 tons; do. of vessels cleared thence, 49,667 tons. Customs revenue (1846) 15,728l. 14s. Reg. shipping of port (1847) 4,584 tons. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday; fair, Friday in Trinity week. Races in July. Corp. rev. (1846-7) 11,364l., arising from rental of fisheries, lands, &c.; corp. debt nearly 60,000l. The borough has sent 2 members to the H. of C. since the reign of Mary. Reg. electors (1846) 888. Before the late municipal reform act, Berwick was a free town, independent of both Scotland and England; but it is now constituted an English county for all purposes except parliamentary elections.

BERWICKSHIRE, a co. of Scotland, forming its S.E. extremity on the coast of German Ocean, and bounded on the S. by Northumberland, and W. by Haddington and Edinburgh shires. The princip. division was formerly called the Merse (March or border dist.). Area 446sq. m., or 285,600 ac., of which 160,000 are cultivated, 100,000 uncultivated, and 25,600 unprofitable. Inhabited houses in 1841, 7,408, pop. in do., 34,438. Its N. part consists of the barren Lammemoor hills; but the dist. of Lauderdale in the W., and the Merse in the S., are level, and among the most fertile and best cultivated tracts in Britain. Principal rivers the Tweed, Eye, and the Leader, Whitadder, Blackadder, and other affluents of the Tweed. Estates are mostly of medium size. Valued rent 178,866l. Scots; annual value of real property (1843), 252,945l. Manufs. comparatively unimportant—amongst the principal is the weaving of gingham at Earlston. Pop. in 1690, 4,000; in 1801, 60,822; in 1841, 182,922. The town, on the river Rea, occupies the E. declivity of three undulating hills, and from the S.E. presents to view a mass of red brick houses, interspersed with several lofty church spires, and a vast number of tall chimneys belonging to its factories. Its lower part consists of unprepossessing streets, old houses, and workshops; but its upper portions comprise many broad streets and good residences. In its centre is a handsome quarter, rivaling in appearance the best parts of the metropolis, and containing the town-hall, Edward vi.'s grammar school, St Philip's and Christ's churches, Queen's college, theatre, and other princip. edifices. The uneven ground on which Birmingham is built, facilitates its drainage, and thus contributes to its salubrity. It is also well lighted with gas, and paved, though many parts of the town are ill furnished with foot-paths. The superb town-hall, one of the finest edifices in Engl., occupies a commanding site, & is in classic style; it is fronted with marble, and has a saloon 145 feet in length, 65 feet in breadth, & the same in height; it can accommodate 8,000 persons (or 4,000 seated), & contains a fine organ, some pipes in which are said to be the largest in Europe: in this hall the triennial musical festivals are held. The theatre, erected in 1821, at a cost of 14,000*l.*, and having a front in the Ionic order, is a handsome building, and one of the most commodious of its class out of the metropolis. The free grammar school, founded in 1552, is a richly decorated Gothic edifice (174 feet by 125 feet), rebuilt in 1834 by Mr Barry, at a cost of nearly 50,000*l.*; it has a revenue, now probably amounting to 11,000*l.* a-year, and 10 exhibitions of 50*l.* per annum for four years, to any college at Oxford or Cambridge. In 1847, the different classes were attended by 1,200 pupils. Queen's College, lately established, and munificently endowed by private benefactions, is in connection with the University of London, and regulated on the old collegiate system; attached to it are a flourishing medical school & Queen's hospital, also recently founded. Birmingham originally consisted of but one pa.; it is now divided into five—St Martin, St Philip, St Thomas, St George, & All Saints. St Martin's church, in the Bull-ring, lower part of the town, was built in the 8th century. It was originally of stone, & is now encased in brick. There are several other chapels belonging to the establishment. These parishes were formerly within the archbishopric of Lichfield and Coventry, but were transferred by the church commissioners to the diocese of Worcester. Dissenting chapels comprise those of Independents, Friends, Methodists, Swedenborgians, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians (the last a numerous sect in Birmingham); and here is a Jews' synagogue. Other principal buildings are—a large general hospital, general dispensary, atheneum, large mkt.-house, Roman Catholic cathedral, a vast brick edifice; the barracks, and railway station, which last is a general point of junction of railways from London, Liverpool, Derby, Worcester, &c. Public institutions comprise a society of arts, with a drawing academy, and annual exhibition of paintings; public library, with 27,000 vols.; philosophic and mechanics' institutions, a blue-coats school (annual revenue 2,500*l.*); Springhill college, for Independents & Baptists; national & proprietary schools, & a great variety of other educational establishments; deaf & dumb, & magdalen asylums; eye & ear, & lying-in infirmaries; a botanic garden, horticultural and statistical societies, and a public cemetery company. The town has extensive baths, and a place of amusement termed "Vaux-hall." Birmingham has made most rapid progress in manufacturing industry within the present century. Its manufactures comprise almost every description of iron and steel goods, brass and iron founding, saddlery, fire-arms, cutlery, gold, silver, plated, bronze, or-molu, and japanned wares; papier-mâché goods, toys, jewellery, electro-plated goods, buttons, steel-pens, glass, tools, steam-engines, and all kinds of machinery. In 1843, the steam-engines employed in its factories, were supposed to have an aggregate power of 5,400 horses, and to consume 377 tons of coals daily, and the annual value of manufactures has been estimated at 4,000,000. Among the most interesting manufacturing establishments, is the steam-engine factory at Soho, the largest in the world, and with which the name of the celebrated Watt is associated. Wages are higher in Birmingham than in most of the manufacturing towns of the North of England; and the condition of its artisans is in favourable contrast to that exhibited at many other places, both as to health and prosperity. It is computed that 20,000 families are employed in trade, manufactures, and handicraft; and a few years ago, upwards of 40,000 of its inhabitants were members of friendly societies. The immense coal and iron beds of the district by which Birmingham is surrounded, may be viewed as the main source of its manufacturing prosperity, which has also been greatly aided by canals, communicating with the Thames, Severn, Mersey, Trent, and Humber, and more recently by railways, which bring the metropolis, and all the great towns of the N. of England, within a few hours' journey. The London and Birmingham railw. was commenced in 1825, and completed in 1825, at an expense of 5½ millions sterling; and by means of the Grand Junction railw., Birmingham has communication with Warrington, Stafford, Manchester, and Liverpool. Mkts. Mond., Thursd., and Sat. Fairs, Thursd., Frid., & Sat. of Whitsun. week, and on the three same days nearest to 29th Sept. By its charter of incorporation, dated 1838, Birmingham is divided into 16 wards, and governed by a mayor and recorder, 16 aldermen, and 48 common councilmen. Corp. rev. (1846-7), 82,267l. It has a bor. court of quarter sessions, and a town court of requests. Assessed taxes (1846-7), 26,075l.; poor-rates (1837), 39,658l. Since the Reform Act it has sent two mems. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1843), 6,129. This town is supposed to have been a place where arms were manufd. in the time of the anc. Britons; its high commerc. importance dates, however, only from the 17th century. In 1791, a disgraceful riot took place here, in which the library of Dr Priestley was burnt by the mob, with other property, to the total amount of 60,000l.; and in 1839, the Bull-ring was the scene of a Chartist outbreak.—Near it are Hagley, the seat of Lord Lyttleton; Enville, the seat of the Earl of Stamford; and numerous elegant villas, the residences of wealthy manufacturers.

falls into Lake Ontario.—IV. in Arkansas, is a considerable affluent of the White-river. Sev. small rivers in the U. S. have the same name.

BLACK, or EUXINE SEA, Pontus Euxinus, a great inland sea between Europe and Asia, within the parallels of lat. 40° 45' & 46° 45' N., and extending from lon. 27° 30' to 41° 50' E.; extreme length 700 m., greatest breadth 380 m. It is surrounded by the countries of Russia, Armenia, and Asiatic and European Turkey, and communicates by the strait of Yenikale with the sea of Azov on the N.E., and by the Bosphorus, with the sea of Marmara in the S.W. The shores of the Euxine are bold and high on the N.E., E., and S.W., but flat on the N. and N.W.; its depth varies from 4 to 48 fathoms near its shores, but in the middle no soundings have been obtained at 160 fathoms. The water contains 1-7th less salt than the ocean, and is so fresh that it freezes very easily. It has numerous small ports; but the only gulf of importance is that of Kerkit, between the Crimea and the continent of Russia. There are several islands near the mouth of the Danube, but few rocks or shoals—the largest of these, Serpent island, is furnished with a lighthouse. The chief affluents of the Euxine are the Danube, Dniester, Bug, Dnieper, the Don (by the sea of Azov and the strait of Yenikale), & the Kuban in Europe; & the Kizil-Irmak and Sakara in Asia. It is calculated that the Black Sea receives one-third of the running waters of Europe, and in consequence of this immense influx, it is believed that a current flows constantly to the Mediterranean; but recent investigation shows that this, as well as the opinion that the sea of Marmara is lower than the Euxine, is founded in error (Homm. de Hell. Bulletin Soc. de Geog., 1848.) The Black Sea has no tide; it is liable to frequent storms, such as are generally met with in great lakes and inclosed seas; but its navigation is so far from being very dangerous, as formerly represented, that probably no sea of equal extent is more safe. It is traversed regularly by steam-packets between Constantinople and the mouths of the Danube, and betw. the principal ports of Russia.

BLACKSON BAY, an extens. inlet on the coast of Irel., co. Mayo. Lat. of entr. 54° 5' N., lon. 10° W.

BOGLIPOOR (Bhaugulpoor), a dist. of British India, Bahar prov., presid. Bengal, enclosed by the dists. Moorshedabad, Birbhoon, Ramghur, Bahar, Tirhoot, and Purneah. Area 8,270 sq. m. Pop., according to Dr Buchanan, 2,019,900, two-thirds of whom are Hindoos, the remainder Mohammedan. The Ganges traverses it, & forms most part of its E. boundary. The hills in the S. are inhabited by a wild people, supposed to be of the aboriginal race of Hindostan. Land rev. (1839-40), 52,268*l.*; total revenue, 64,163*l.*; expenditure, 21,207*l.*—Boglipoor ("the abode of refugees"), is the cap. of the above dist., 2 m. S. of the Ganges, and 104 m. N.W. Moorshedabad. Pop. estimated at 30,000, the majority Mohammedans. It covers a large surface, and consists of a number of scattered mkt.-places, and collections of mean houses, with an English church and chapels, school, jail, hospital, Mohammedan Arabic college, and several mosques. It has manufactures of coarse silk fabrics. Near it are some remarkable round towers, to which the Jains resort in pilgrimage.

BOGNOR (formerly HOTHAMPTON), a marit. mkt. t., chapelry, & bathing-place, Engl., co. Sussex, rape and 6 m. S.E. Chichester, pa. S. Berested. Pop. (1831) 2,190. It was a mere fishing village previously to 1780, when its proprietor, Sir R. Hotham, began improvements which have now rendered it a favourite place of resort. It is sheltered from N. winds, and has many pleasant residences, a good mkt.-place, several places of worship, and a school, founded by the Princess Charlotte. A rocky coast renders it accessible only to small coasting vessels. Markets, Thursday and Saturday. Fairs, February 5th and 6th. It has a station on the S. coast railway.

BOHODUKHOV, a fortfd. town of Russia, gov. & 29 m. N.W. Kharkov, cap. dist., on the Merle. Pop. 5,000, engaged in leather-dressing, boot-making, and trade in cattle and hides.

BOGOTA (formerly SANTA FE DE BOGOTA), a city of S. Amer., cap. of the repub. of New Grenada, on a plateau 8,958 ft. above the sea, in lat.  $4^{\circ} 35'$  N., lon.  $74^{\circ} 10'$  W. Pop. estimated at 40,000. It is built on the San Francisco river, and has a fine external appearance; streets regular, though narrow, and all are paved; but they are kept very dirty, and badly lighted. Houses mostly of sundried bricks, low built, whitewashed, tiled, and placed around a central court; shops numerous. It has several squares, in the chief of which are the cathedral (nearly ruined in 1827 by an earthquake), palace of the president, & custom-house. Other principal buildings are the palaces of the deputies and senate, the mint, barracks, and theatre, and an abundance of churches, convents, &c. Nearly one half of the city is occupied by religious structures, and most part of the property in it belongs to the church. Bogota has a university, 3 colleges, a school of mineralogy, Lancasterian school, national academy, museum, and public library. Bogota owes its importance to its having been for a long time the seat of government. Its inhabitants are well supplied with provisions; European manufs. are, however, said to be very dear. (For general trade see NEW GRANADA.) The environs of Bogota are highly interesting. The Rio Francisco, which traverses the city, joins the Rio Bogota in the centre of the plain, and the conjoint waters descend in a S.W. direction, through a ravine nearly 40 m. long. At the cataract of Tequenadama the cleft between the rocks is only 36 feet wide, & the waters descend in an unbroken mass 900 ft. In the centre is the natural bridge of Icononzo, or Pandi; formed by two rocks that unite the opposite sides of a deep mountain cleft, 300 ft. above the surface of the torrent. North of the city fossil bones of a gigantic size have been found. The Campo contains also coal-fields, and towards the N. border the rich salt mines of Zikaquirá. Here also is lake Guatavita, into which it is supposed the ancient inhabitants threw their treasure when conq. by the Spaniards.

BOHEMIA (KINGDOM OF), German Böhmen, a political & administrative division of the Austrian empire, forming the E. part of the Germanic confederation, between lat. 48° 33' and 51° 3' N., and lon. 12° and 16° 46' E., bounded N. by Saxony & Pruss. Silesia, E. by Prussia & Moravia, S. by lower Austria, and W. by Bavaria: cap. Prag (Prague). Area estim. at 20,000 sq. m. Pop. (1846), (exclusive of military), 4,347,962. The territory forms an enclosed plateau, nearly surrounded by elevated chains of mntns., the chf. of which are the Riesengebirge (Giant mntns.) on the N., the Sudetengebirge N.E., the Böhmerwald (Boh. Forest mntns.) S. W., and Erzgebirge (Ore mntns.) in the N.W. The interior is traversed by the contreforts of these chains. Its principal valleys are those of the Elbe and Moldan. Forming the upper basin of the Elbe, to which nearly all its streams are tributary, the country is richly watered. The Elbe rises in the Riesengebirge, & receives on the rt. the Isar, & on the l. the Aupe, Mettan, Erlitz, Moldan, Eger, and Bila. The Moldan, the largest river in the kgdm., receives on the rt. the Czazawa and the Luschnitz, on the l. the Watawa & the Beraun. The climate is in general healthy, mild in the valleys, but cold in the mntns. regions; the higher mntns. being covered with snow during great part of the year. Soil in general fertile, especially in the N. and N.E., in the valleys of the Eger & Elbe. It is very rich in metals, minerals, and precious stones; the productive part of the land forms nearly 13-16ths of the superficies. Bohemia is both an agricultural and a manufacturing country, but especially rich in the produce of its agriculture. The principal crops are rye, oats, & potatoes. Fruit is grown in great abundance; flax is raised of an excellent quality, & the hops are considered the best in Germany. Beet-root, for the manuf. of sugar, has been grown in considerable quantity of late years. Vines are grown only in part of the valley of the Elbe. The forests yield a very large amount of timber. The rearing of cattle as a branch of industry has been much neglected, but is on the increase. The produce of the mines, especially in precious metals, has been for centuries one of the princip. sources of wealth; the chief mining districts are in the Erzgebirge and the contreforts of the Fichtelgebirge. The gold mines, formerly so valuable, are now entirely abandoned, & the silver mines have lost much of their importance; but the produce of iron and coal is greatly on the increase. Among the other metals and minerals are cinnabar, bismuth, chrome, zinc, sulphur, alum, and marble. Bohemia possesses a great number of mineral springs of all kinds, among the most celebrated of which are those of Franzensbrunnen, Marienbad, Karlsbad, Töplitz, and Bilin. In manufg. industry this country has long been considered one of the most important provs. of the empire. The chief seat of this industry is in the N. provs. and among the German pop. of the mntns.: it consists principally in thread, linens, cotton, iron, woollens, glass, and paper. The manuf. of glass, though less important than formerly, still retains its celebrity for beauty and cheapness. The commerce of the country consists in the exportation of the products of the soil and manufs., the importation of colonial goods, and the transit of merchandise from N. Germany to Austria, Switzerland, and Italy. The Elbe and the Moldau are navigated by steam packets, and the latter communicates with the Danube by a horse railway from Budweis to Linz. Prague is connected by railway with Olmütz on the E., & Lana on the W., and a line is at present (1849) in progress N. to Leitmeritz and Dresden. Bohemia, with the title of kgdm., forms a provincial government of the Austrian empire, having certain political privileges: it is comprised in the states of the Germanic confederation. The Emperor of Austria bears the title of King of Bohemia, and is crowned at Prague. It came into the possession of the house of Austria in 1526. It consists of 1 district, that of Prag, and 16 circles; Beraun, Bidschow, Budweis, Bunzlau, Chrudim, Czaslan, Elbogen, Kaurzim, Klattâo, Königgrätz, Leitmeritz, Pilsen, Prachim, Rakonitz, Saaz, and Tabor. The Roman Catholic is the religion of the state, and the other sects are only tolerated. Bohemia possesses num. estabs. for public instruction. The university of Prag is one of the most anc. and celeb. in Germany; it had, in 1842, 71 professors and teachers, and 2,741 students. The kgdm. has 3 episcopal schools, 22 gymnasia, having (in 1846) 5,683 pupils. The number of private schools was (in 1845) 3,490, attended by 516,831 pupils, while the number of children able to attend school was 544,922. There are many learned societies in Bohemia, with which are connected public libraries, botanic gardens, and scientific collections, and it has charitable institutions in all the principal cities. The chief fortifications are at Prag, Josephstadt, Königgrätz, and Theresienstadt.

It is said to be 8 m. in circ., enclosed by earthen ramparts, entered by 12 gates, & intersected by numerous canals. Streets very narrow, and houses mostly small and flat-roofed. In the centre is the citadel, containing the palace, harem, and residences of the state-officers, with the royal stables, barracks, &c. Bokhara is said to have 360 mosques, several of great architectural beauty, and at least as many colleges and schools; this city having been long famous as a seat of Mohammedan learning. There are 20 caravansaries and 100 ponds and fountains. Among its pop. are about 4,000 Jews, who carry on an active commerce; here may be met the natives and merchants of Persia, Turkey, Russia, Tartary, China, India, and Cahool. Tradition assigns the foundation of Bokhara to the age of Alexander the Great; it was ruined by Jenghis Khan in 1219, and was not rebuilt until the end of his reign. Under Timour it flourished anew, and it is now one of the richest cities in Central Asia. In our day it has acquired unfortunate notoriety from the immolation of Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly within its walls.

All the centre of the country is covered with ramifications of the Andes, which here divide into two cordilleras, enclosing the Lake of Titicaca. The W. Cordillera forms the boundary on the side of Peru, betw. lat. 16° and 22° S., and here are the highest peaks of the Andes (Sorato being 25,250 feet), and the volcanoes of Atacama, Tacora, &c. The region between the Pacific and the Andes is nearly barren, and is called the desert of Atacama. The valley of Titicaca is rather fertile, especially in the vicinity of the lake. The long valleys S. of the Sierra de la Cruz, are the most populous & best cultivated parts of Bolivia, especially the valley of Cochabamba. The Yunga valleys N. of Sierra de la Cruz are also fertile. The plains of Moxos and Chuquitos are covered with dense forests. The streams which descend from the W. valley of the Andes do not reach the Pacific, except the Loa, which flows 180 m., but with a very scanty supply of water. Numerous rivers descend from the E. declivity of the Andes. These belong to the basins of either the Amazon or La Plata; among the former class, the Beni, Mamore, Rio Grande, or Guapai, tributaries of the Madeira, are the principal; and, among the latter, the Pilcomayo and Paraguay. The Desaguadero has its entire course, about 200 m., in Bolivia; it flows out of Lake Titicaca, the largest lake in S. America. Besides L. Titicaca, the S.E. half of which is in this republic, many others exist in the wide plains in the E., a region which is stated to be little above the sea level. In the middle region the rainy season & extensive inundations last from Nov. to Feb.; but on the coast rain seldom falls. Amongst the vegetable productions are cacao of the finest quality, cotton, indigo, rice, barley, oats, potatoes, maize, sugar cane, cinchona (Peruvian bark), and numerous other valuable drugs, the finest fruits, and timber fit for every purpose. Gold is found in all the rivers in the E. Cordillera of the Andes; and the productiveness of the silver mines of Potosi were for a long time very great, though now on the decline. In 1840, silver to the value of 2,600,507 dollars, and gold to 230,830 dollars, are stated to have been coined at Potosi; lead, tin, salt, sulphur, nitre, are also met with. Copper mines are also abundant, but are too far inland to be brought to advantage. Among the wild animals are the tapir, jaguar, leopard, several species of monkeys, and amphibious reptiles, birds, and fishes in great numbers. The climate of the plains is too hot for sheep; but vast herds of cattle feed on the banks of the rivers, and the llama, guanaco, and vicuna inhabit the mntns. More than 3-4ths of the population are Indians, the rest Mestizos, Spaniards, and a few Africans. The native pop. of the valley of Titicaca consists of Peruvians, who follow agriculture and the rearing of cattle. The plains are inhabited by numerous tribes. The Moxos, who are said to have been civilized by the missionaries 200 years ago, have become agricultural. The Chuquitos still retain their nomadic habits. The tribes on the Beni are wild and warlike, and in a savage condition. Some of the tribes manuf. fine cloths, fans, parasols, &c.; the other principal manufs. are of cotton goods, and glass wares at Cochabamba, cloths of lama and alpaca hair at La Paz, hats of vicuna wool at Atacama, vessels of silver wire in the mining dists.; but they are all comparatively insignificant in extent. The foreign commerce of Bolivia is small, owing to its being almost shut out by the Andes from contact with the sea. Foreign goods mostly come from Peru by way of Arica and Tacua, and are subject to a high transit duty. Imports are mostly confined to iron, hardwares, silk, and a few other articles; and the exports to the precious metals, wool, woollen goods, and hats, pewter, cacao leaf, cinchona, and other drugs, bark, skins, soap, and tobacco; and, in 1840, they amounted in value (wool and corn excepted) to 19,134L. The executive government is vested in a president; the legislative functions are exercised by a senate, tribunes, and censors. The country is divided into 3 bishoprics; but there is no church exclusively supported by the state. Public rev. about 1,700,000 dollars a-year. Standing army about 2,000 men. There is said to be no public debt. Bolivia, under the name of Upper Peru, was formerly a part of the Spanish vicerealty of Buenos Ayres; but it acquired its independence in 1824, and its name was assumed in honour of Bolivar, who, in 1826, drew up its earliest constitution. Chuquisaca is the cap. and seat of general government. Cobija is the only seaport.

BOLKENHAIN, a town of Pruss. Silesia, cap. circ. on l. b. of the Neisse. P. 2,450. Linen & woollen manufs. W. of the t. is the ruin of Bolkoburg tower.

BOLKHOV, a town of Russia, gov. and 80 m. N. Orel, on the Nougra. Pop. upwards of 10,000. It is a cap. circ.; is well built, though mostly of wood; and has extensive manufs. of leather, gloves, hats, and hosiery, with a trade in hemp, linseed oil, tallow, and hides.

BOLL, a vill. of Württemberg, circ. Danube, 5 m. S. W. Göppingen, with 1,500 inhabitants, and mineral springs and baths, much frequented.

BOLLENE, or BOLLENNE, a town of France, dep. Vaucluse, cap. cant., arrond. & 22 m. N. Avignon. Pop. 2,860, or with comm. 4,768, employed in silk thread factories and dye-works.

BOLLEN-TEE, a tnsbp. of England, co. Chester, pa. Wilsmslow, on the Chester Extension railw., 6 m. S. W. Stockport. Pop. 2,212, mostly employed in silk and cotton manufactures.

BOLLINGEN, a vill. of Switzerland, with mineral baths, cant. and 3 m. N. E. Bern. Pop. 1,400.

BOLLINGTON, a tnsbp. of Engl., co. Chester, pa. Prestbury, 3 m. N. N. E. Macclesfield. Pop. 4,350.

BOLLULLOS DEL CONDADO, a modern town of Spain, prov. & 20 m. N. E. Huelva. Pop. 4,536.

BOLLWILLER, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. H. Rhin, on the Strasbourg & Basle railway, 7½ m. N. E. Mülhausen. Pop. 1,300, with a celebrated nursery for indigenous and exotic plants.

BOLNEY, a pa. of Engl., co. Sussex, 3 m. S. W. Cuckfield. Area 3,550 ac. Pop. 713. [HARPSDEN.]

BOLNURST, a pa. of England, co. and 6½ m. N. N. E. Bedford. Area 2,130 ac. Pop. 344.

BOLOGNA (anc. Felsina, afterwards Bonomia), a famous city of Italy, and the second in rank in the Pontif. states, cap. legation, finely situated in a plain N. of the Apennines, on the canal of Bologna, 24 m. S. E. Modena, and 27 m. S. W. Ferrara. Lat. of observatory 44° 29' 54" N., lon. 11° 21' E. Elevation 205 ft. above the sea. Pop. (1844) 75,000. It forms an oval, enclosed by a brick wall, about 2 m. in length, by 1½ m. in breadth, entered by 12 gates, and intersected by the Reno canal. With its rich and varied colonnades, affording a pleasant shelter from the sun and rain, well-paved streets, noble institutions, and a flourishing, intelligent, and learned pop., it rivals Rome in all except classical and religious interest, and the extent of its museums. Bologna is one of the great centres of public instruction in Italy. Its university, the oldest in the penins., & one of the most anc. in Europe (founded 1119), had, in 1841, 560 students. It has an academy of fine arts, with rich galleries of painting and sculpture, a grand school of music, extens. libraries, cabinets, an observatory, and a botanic garden, one of the richest in Europe. It is said to have 74 churches, 35 convents for monks, and 38 for nuns, all of which are adorned with fine works of art. Principal churches, San Stefano, one of the oldest in Italy; the cathedral, a fine edifice of the 17th and 18th centuries, with paintings by L. Caracci; San Petronio, with magnificent works, and the meridian of Cassini traced on the floor; St Dominic, S. Bartolomeo, &c., many of which date from the early centuries of the christian era. The other principal edifices are the palazzo publico, podestá palace, registry, chamber of commerce, scuole pie, numerous fine private palaces (including one built for Rossini in 1825), and the famous tower of Asinelli, the loftiest in Italy, built in 1110, and the leaning tower of Garisenda, from the top of which former it is said that 103 cities may be seen. In the principal square is a large fountain with a fine statue of Neptune. Outside of the city an arcade, nearly 3 m. in length, leads to the church of the Madonna di San Luca. Bologna has numerous hospitals, theatres, academies, learned societies, and schools; manufs. of crape, chemical products, wax candles, musical instruments, paper, cards, and mortadelle, or sausages, in high repute; and a considerable trade in other products. It has been an archbisp.'s see since the 4th cent., and is the residence of a cardinal legate, and the seat of the court of appeal for the four N. legations of the Pontifical states. No Italian city, except Florence, has produced so many men distinguished in science & the arts, among whom are Galvani, Aldrovandi, Malpighi, Massighi, the Zanotti, 8 popes, nearly 200 cardinals; the painters Guido, Albano, Domenichino, &c.; & finally, the 3 Caracci, the founders of the far-famed Bolognese school of painting. Bologna became finally annexed to the Pontif. sta. in 1506. (Murray's Handbook for Central Italy contains a most elaborate and complete account of whatever demands notice in this city.)

BOLONCHEN, a thriving vill. of Central Amer., Yucatan, 50 m. N. E. Campeche. Pop. 7,000. In the vicinity is a deep cavern in the limestone rock, where there is a copious supply of water.

BOLOR-TAGH, a great mntn. chain of Central Asia, which separates the Chinese Empire on the E. from Koondooz, and Kafiristan on the W. It extends between lat. 35° and 45° N., and lon. 70° and 75° E., forming a part of the table-land of Pamir, connected with the Hindoo Koosh on the S., and the Thian-Shan mntns. in the centre. Its culminating points, betw. lat. 35° and 40°, are supposed to exceed 19,000 ft. in elevation. Three great passes cross this chain; two from Yarkand and Kashgar W. ward, about lat. 39°, and one from Budukshan into Little Tibet.

BOLOTANA, a town of Sardinia, near its centre, prov. Nuoro, cap. mand., 28 m. E. Bosa. P. 3,250.

BOLSAS, a river, confed. and dep. Mexico. This river after a long W. course, in a part of which it separates the depts. Mexico & Michoacan, enters the Pacific Ocean 225 m. S. W. Mexico. On it are the towns Miscala, Huétamo, and Zacatula.

BOLSENA, Volsinium, a town of Italy, Pontif. sta., deleg. and 20 m. N. N. W. Viterbo, on the N. shore of the lake of Bolsena. It was one of the 12 Etruscan cities, cap. of the Volsci, and birth-place of Sejanus; but is now a miserable village. The lake of Bolsena (Lacus Volsiniensis) is 10 m. long, & 8 m. broad, surrounded by finely wooded hills, and commanding many magnif. prospects. It discharges its waters by the Marta river S. W. into the Mediterranean, and in it are the two small islands Bisentina and Martana.

BOLSHEREFSK, a seaport town of N. E. Asia, Kantschatka, 120 m. W. Petropaulovsk. P. 200.

BOLSON DE MAPIMI, a wild and rocky dist. in the N. part of the Mexican confed., surrounded by the depts. Coahuila, Chihuahua, and Durango, in which last it is included. Area nearly 60,000 sq. m. Peopled only by Indian tribes.

BOLSOVER, a town and pa. of England, co. Derby, 6 m. E. Chesterfield. Area of pa. 6,060 ac. Pop. 1512. It has an ancient church with a fine sepulchral chapel of the Cavendish family, and a castle, part of which is still habitable, & in which the Duke of Newcastle entertained Charles I. in 1633. Princip. manuf., tobacco pipes, that of steel buckles having long since declined. The charities of the pa. have an aggreg. income of 104l. per ann.

BOLSWARD, a fortified town of the Netherlands, prov. Friesland, cap. cant., 14 m. S.W. Leeuwarden. Pop. (1840) 4,223. It has a Latin school, manufs. of woollens, and a large trade in butter.

BOLTON (LE MOORS), a large manufacturing town, parl. and munic. bor., and pa. of England, co. Lancaster, hund. Stafford, on an affluent of the Irwell, 12 m. N.W. Manchester, and 175 m. N.N.W. London. Area of pa. 31,390 ac. Pop. 73,905. Pop. of borough, chiefly composed of the township and Little Bolton, 50,163. It is well supplied with water, and of late years several new squares and many handsome villas have been constructed, mostly on the S. side. Principal edifices an ancient parish church, several handsome chapels of ease, and numerous dissenting places of worship; a grammar school founded in 1641 (revenue 485*l.* a-year); a charity school endowed in 1693 (revenue 227*l.*); 2 town-halls, 2 cloth-halls, a neat exchange, theatre, assembly and concert rooms, &c. It has several good libraries, a mechanics' institute, daily and Sunday schools, and several large charity endowments, including the Poplewell's munificent legacy of 27,700*l.* 3 per cent. for the promotion of religion and learning for the poor. The woollen manufs. of Bolton, introduced by Flemings in 1337, were in a flourishing state before the reign of Henry VIII.; but the great prosperity of the town dates from the introduction of the invention of Arkwright and Crompton, constructors of the mule-jenny, both natives of this parish, which has since become, through their labours, one of the principal seats of the English cotton manufacture. In 1838 there were 69 cotton mills, employing 9,918 hands, chiefly in the manuf. of muslins, fine calicoes, cotton shawls, quiltings, jeans, fustians, &c.; and the average quantity of cloth bleached in the parish annually, has been estimated at from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 pieces. Bolton has also large paper, flax, and saw mills, chemical works, and foundries. The numer. coals pits wrought in the vicinity, with canal carriage to Manchester, have greatly promoted the prosperity of the town, now still further advanced by a railway to Bury and Manchester, another to Leigh, forming an easy communication with Liverpool, and a third with Preston and the N. Markets, Saturday and Monday. Fairs, July 30 and 31, and October 13 and 14. It is the head of a poor-law union. Corp. rev. (1846-7) 7,093*l.*; expend. 6,833*l.* Since the reform act Bolton has sent two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1846) 1,479. Assessed taxes (1847) 2,708*l.*

BOLTON, the name of numerous pas. of England.—I. co. Northumberland, 6 m. S.S.W. Wigton. Area 8,760 ac. Pop. 1,211. Coal and limestone abound, and a copper mine has been lately opened in this parish.—II. (Abbey), a chapelry of England, co. York, W. Riding, on the Wharfe, pa. and 5 m. N.E. Skipton. Pop. 227. Bolton priory, the nave of which now forms the parochial chapel, the gateway, a shooting lodge of the Duke of Devonshire, and the remainder a beautiful ruin, was founded in the 12th cent. in memory of the "Boy of Egremont," who perished in attempting to cross the "stride," a narrow chasm near this place, within which the waters of the Wharfe are for a few yards confined. The domain of Bolton, one of the most picturesque tracts of England, belongs to the Duke of Devonshire.—III. (By Bowland), a pa., co. York, W. Riding, on the Ribble, 6 m. N.E. Clithero. Area 4,940 ac. Pop. 933.—IV. (Le Sands), co. and 3 m. N. Lancaster. Area 7,630 ac. Pop. 1,774. Charities. 125*l.*—V. (Percy), co. and ainsty York, 5 m. E.S.E. Tadcaster. Area 7,320 ac. Pop.

1,040. The church, a noble building, erected in 1423, has some fine stained glass and several ornaments of the Fairfax family.—VI. (Upon Dearne), a pa. same riding, 7 m. N.N.E. Rotherham. Area 2,390 ac. Pop. 671. Fairs, 2d Thursday in November.—VII. (On Swale), a chapelry, co. York, N. Riding, pa. Catterick, 4½ m. E.S.E. Richmond. Pop. 96. Fair, June 28. In the church is the tomb of Henry Jenkins, a native of the parish, where he died in 1670, at the extraordinary age of 169 years.—VIII. a pa., co. Cumberland, 6 m. S.S.W. Wigton. Area 8,760 ac. Pop. 1,211. Coal & limestone abound, and a copper mine has been opened.

BOLTON, several townships, U. S., N. America.—I. co. Massachusetts, 25 m. W. Boston. Pop. 1,186.—II. Connecticut, Tolland co. Pop. 739.—III. Warren, co. New York. Pop. 937.

BOLZANO, a town of Germany. [Botzen.]
BOMBA, a vill. of Naples, prov. Abruzzo Cit., 18 m. W.S.W. Vasto. Pop. 2,200. Its vicinity produces esteemed oil and wine.

BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, the most westerly, and the smallest of the three presids. of British India, mostly between lat. 14° and 24° N., and lon. 72° and 76° E., having N.W. and N. the Guicowar's dom., E. the territories of Indore & the Nizam, S. Goa, Mysore, & the Madras presid., & W. the Indian Ocean. Area, pop., subdivns., as follow:—

Collectorates.	Area in sq. m.	Population (latest returns).
Bombay Island, . . . . .	15	230,000
Poonah, . . . . .	8,281	558,313
A Ahmednuggur, . . . . .	9,910	666,378

Sattarah, &c., . . . . .	8,169	738,284
Total, . . . . .	68,074	6,940,277

In the Bombay Calender for 1845, the aggregate area is set down at 59,438 sq. m., and pop. at 6,261,546; but this seems to be exclusive of Sattarah, which is now substantially British territory.

The W. Ghats separate the W. or marit. from the E. dists., which latter form a part of the great table-land of the Deccan. In the N. the mntns. belong to the Santpoora and other ranges connected with the Vindhyan chain. Principal rivs. the Nerbudda, Taptee, Mhye, & Sabermutty, falling into the Gulf of Cambay: above the ghats the rivs. are tributary to the Godavery & Kistnah. Climate for the most part less hot & more healthy than in the other presids., a great part of the country being under the influence of the sea-breezes. Rice and cotton are the principal articles of culture, and the cotton of this presidency is decidedly superior to that of the others. Some sugar and indigo are raised in Candesh. Opium is nowhere cultivated, & other great staples of Indian produce are only produced in small quantities; but in return, the cardamoms, pepper, and teak, exported from India, are almost exclusively the growth of this region. The N. dists. are famous for their great variety of fruits; cocoa palms cover a very large extent of sandy land in the Concan, &c.; wool has lately been exported in considerable quantities from Bombay; and great exertions have been made to introduce the culture of silk. The cattel of Gujerat, are a large and fine breed; W. of the ghauts the ox and buffalo are almost the only domestic animals. The whole presid. is assessed under the native village-system of India, except the dists. of Surat & Kaira, where the ryotwarry system is in force. Principal manufs. are of embroidered silks, and woollen and cotton cloths. For an account of the foreign trade, see BOMBAY CITY. Government vested in a governor and 3 members of council, of whom one is commander-in-chief; the whole administration being subordinate to the gov.-general of India in council. In the cap. of each collectorate is the seat of a British collector, and a judge, subordinate to the central court of Bombay. A few years ago the army comprised about 30,000 men & officers, of whom 6,260 were Europeans. The whole of the Indian marine is attached to this presidency. In the S. there are many native and Roman catholic and Nestorian christians. The Parsees are now almost confined to this part of Asia. Total net rev. in 1842-3, 2,091,395*l.*; expend. 2,124,299*l.* There are in the presidency an English episcopal bishopric with 24 clergy, a Scottish kirk, and Roman catholic establishment, which receive government aid. Elphinstone college was founded in 1837, and there are 120 schools for the native Hindoos, in which from 8 to 900 boys receive education, besides nearly 2,000 native village schools. Bombay was the earliest possession of the British in the east. It was ceded by the Moguls to the Portuguese in 1530, and it came into the possession of the English in 1662, as a part of the dowry of the Infanta of Portugal, on her marriage with Charles II.; but by far the greater part of the territory has been acquired between 1803 and 1818.

BOMBAY (Portuguese Buon-Bahia, "good harbour"), a city, seaport and cap. of the above presidency, is situated on a narrow neck of land at the S.E. extremity of the island of Bombay. Lat. 18° 56' N., lon. 72° 53' E. In 1716, the pop. was 16,000. In 1816, 161,350, and according to Bombay Calendar 1845, 235,000. Of these, two-thirds are Hindoos, 20,000 Parsees, & the rest Musselmans, Jews, and Christians; with a great variety of fluctuating pop., chiefly sailors and traders. It consists of the fort or old town, 1 m. in length by  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. in breadth, and in which the European inhabitants, and most of the Parsee merchants reside; and the new town, about 1 m. distant N.ward, inhabited by the Hindoos & Mohammedan native pop., beyond which suburb are many detached villas and bungalows belonging to European and other residents. Bombay has a lively appearance from the sea; but as a city, it is greatly inferior to Calcutta or Madras. The houses within the walls are built of wood, & covered with tiles. Principal edifices in the fort are the court-house, secretariate, and other government offices, custom-house, town-hall, castle, mint, cathedral of St. Thomas, St. Andrew's Scotch church, European hospital, &c. In the centre of the fort is an irregular open space called the "Green;" and outside of the massive fortifications is the esplanade. In the new town are Elphinstone college, Sir J. Jejeebhoy's hospital, the Byculla church and club, the house of correction, theatre, and the great Hindoo temple of Momba Devi. On the S.W. the fort is connected by Colabba causeway, with the isl. of Colabba, on which are the lighthouse, observatory, lunatic asylum, some mercantile buildings, and a stone pier. The government-house is at Parell, 6 m. N. of the fort. The property of the isl. belongs principally to the Parsees, who are the chief merchants & monied men. The harbour of Bombay is one of the best in India, and affords good anchorage for ships of the largest burden; on it are also excellent building and other docks for ships of the first class. Next to Calcutta and Canton, Bombay is the principal commercial emporium in the east, and for many years its trade has been uniformly increasing. The imports from China are greater than at either of the other presid., & consist of raw silk, sugar, and sugar-candy, silk piece goods, treasure, &c., which last, in 1843-4, was imported to the amount of 2,743,810*l.* Imports from Great Britain are cotton & woollen stuffs, cotton yard, hardwares, copper, iron, lead, glass, apparel, furs, wine, beer; amongst the other articles imported are ivory, spices, coffee, and the produce generally of Persia, Arabia, and the Malay archipelago. Total value of the imports in 1843-4, 8,992,212*l.*, of which piece goods amounted to 1,436,084*l.*, metals 514,697*l.*, and cotton 417,155*l.* Value of exports in do., 8,742,237*l.*, including cotton to the value of 2,105,815*l.*; of which, goods amounting to 3,557,567*l.* went to China, & others to 1,704,624*l.* were shipped for Great Britain. In the same year 377 vessels, aggreg. burden 168,882 tons entered the port, of which 360, burden 164,934 tons, were under the British flag. In 1834, the aggregate value of imports was 3,653,319*l.* In 1837 a steam navigation was commenced between Bombay and Suez; three steamers were at first employed, which the war in 1843 increased to 8; and a regular monthly passage is now made from London to India, under the arrangements of the Oriental Steam Navigation Company.—Bombay Island, on which the city is built, is 8 m. in length, & 3 in breadth, and is formed of two ranges of greenstone, connected in the middle by sandstone strata. The interior lies low, and was at one time liable to be flooded by the tide, but an embankment was erected to keep out the sea.

BOOSNAH, a town of British India, presid. Bengal, dist. Jessore, 102 m. N.E. Calcutta.

BOOTAN, or BHOTAN, a country of N. Hindostan, partly independent, but according to recent information, partly also dependent on Tibet, between lat. 26° 30' and 28° 30' N., lon. 88° 30' and 94° E., having W. Sikkim, S. and E. Bengal and Assam, and N. the main chain of the Himalaya, which here rises to 25,000 ft in elevation. Total area has been loosely estim. at 64,500 sq. m. Pop. 1,500,000 (?). Surface wholly mntnous, with a general slope S.w.ard; and this region differs from most others, in its lower hill ranges having but a scanty vegetation, while its finest forests are from 8,000 to 10,000 feet above the sea. Among its principal products are oak, pine, and other timber, rattans, numerous fruits, and esculent vegetables. Some wheat, barley, rice, maize, and buckwheat are raised in terraces along the hill sides; but supplies of grain, as also of sugar and tobacco, come mostly from Bengal, in return for native cloths, rock-salt, rhubarb, jabruncg spice, a few Tibet goods, & mules & ponies of an excellent breed. Except potter's clay, iron appears to be the only mineral raised, though Bootan is reported to be rich in copper & other metals. Chf. manufs. are of woven goods, paper, a species of satin from bark, tobacco-pouches, gunpowder, arms, & hardwares. Princip. trade is with Bengal; from Tibet, however, some silks and rich tea are imported. Travellers in Bootan have remarked the great number of its castellated strongholds, and praise the ingenuity & solidity of its suspension and wooden bridges. Towns are few; the principal are Tassisudon, & Punakka, alternately the residences of the Deb-rajah. This functionary, who is also the principal merchant in the country, exercises all the actual sovereignty; the Dharma-rajah, or nominal sovereign, consid. to have divine attributes, being vested with none of the civil power. The government appears, from the report of Capt. Pemberton, who recently visited Bootan, to be about as bad as possible, rapacity & immorality prevailing throughout nearly all ranks of the community. The state religion is Buddhism, & Bootan swarms with priests, the monastic endowments absorbing a large part of the national property. The custom of polyandry, probably peculiar to the countries of the Himalaya, is here prevalent; but polygamy also prevails, & to these causes, the comparative thinness of the pop. has been attributed.

BORCETTE, a town of Prussia. [BURTSCHREID.]

BORDEAUX, Burdigala, a city in the S.W. of France, cap. dep. Gironde, on left bank of the Garonne, 60 m. from its mouth, in the Atlantic. Lat.  $44^{\circ} 50' 19''$  N., lon.  $0^{\circ} 34' 32''$  W. Pop. (1846) 120,203. It communicates by railway with the port of La Teste, and by another (in course of construction) with Paris. It is an archbishop's see, the seat of a national court, and of a university academy; cap. of the 11th military division, and has a tribunal of commerce, an exchange, and a bank with a cap. of 300,000 francs, a secondary school of medicine, college, normal school, school of navigation, and a mint. Bordeaux is one of the most flourishing cities of Europe in point of industry, commerce, and the cultivation of the arts and sciences. In the old part of the city the streets are crooked and narrow, but the new quarters, especially the rue Chapeau Rouge, the allées de Tourny; and the many public edifices are of great beauty and elegance. Situated on a navigable river, in this part about 2,600 ft. broad, and from 60 to 90 feet deep, which puts it in communication on one side with the ocean, and on the other with the Mediterranean, by the Canal du Midi, it has become the first port in the South of France. Its basin, formed by the Garonne, is capable of containing 1,200 ships of any size, and is accessible even for ships of 800 tons at all times of the tide; it has docks & building yards for every size of vessels, even for ships of the line. It is the entrepôt of prohibited goods; and has manufs. of all kinds, especially tobacco, vinegar, nitric acid, liqueurs, and chemical products; sugar and saltpetre refineries, numerous distilleries, cotton and woollen spinning, and manufs. of printed calicoes, & iron foundries. Its commerce extends to all parts of the world. Its principal expts. are wines, brandy and fruits; chief imports, colonial merchandise, cotton goods, iron, coal, and building timber. Reg. shipping (1841), 68,566 tons. Foreign shipping to the amount of 103,461 tons entered, and 101,719 tons, of which 31,092 were British, sailed from the port in 1842. The principal merchants are engaged in the wine trade, nearly the half of the best sorts of wine are sent to England, since little of the finest Medoc is used in France; Paris takes only the second, third, and fourth-rate wines. Before the revolution the annual export of wine amounted to 100,000 hogsheads; in 1827 the amount was 54,492. The principal fruits exptd. from Bordeaux, are plums & almonds. Among the most remarkable public edifices of Bordeaux, are the remains of the palace of Gallienus, the cathedral, a fine Gothic structure, the church of the Feuillants, which contains the tomb of Montaigne; the great theatre built by Louis xvi., one of the finest in Europe, seated for 4,000 persons; the exchange, the Palais Royal, formerly the archiepiscopal palace; the Hôtel de la Marine, the triumphal arch of the port Bourgogne, and especially the magnificent bridge across the Garonne, which consists of 17 arches, and is 1,595 feet in length. Under the name of Burdigala, this was a rich and important place at the time of the conquest of the country by the Romans, who made it the cap. of the 2d Aquitania, and it was embellished by the emperors. The wines of Bordeaux were celebrated as early as the 4th century. The city was sacked by the Visigoths, who were driven from it by Clovis. It was ravaged by the Saracens and Normans in the 8th and 9th cents., and came into the possession of the dukes of Gascony in 911. In 1152 it passed, by the marriage of Henry Plantagenet with Eleonore of Guienne, under the dominion of England; since 1453 it has belonged to France. Among the many distinguished men who were born in this city and its vicinity, may be noticed the poet Ausonius, Montaigne, Montesquieu, the Black Prince, Richard II. of England, and Pope Clement v., the moralist Berquin, and the painter Carl Vernet.

BORDELAIS, an old subdiv. of France, formed of the coast-line of the prov. Guyenne, and of which Bordeaux was the cap: it now forms the greater part of the dep. Gironde, & a portion of Landes.

BORNEO (native name Pulo-Kalamantin), an isl. of Malaysia, near the centre of the Eastern Archipelago, in the Pacific Ocean, situated between lat. 7° 4' N., and 4° 10' S., and lon. 108° 50' and 119° 20' E., divided by the equator into 2 nearly equal portions, and bounded N. and W. by the China Sea, S. by the Sea of Java, and E. by the Sea of Celebes and the Strait of Macassar. Borneo is, next to Australia, the largest isl. on the globe. It is of a compact form, and has few great indentations of the sea, but many extensive bays and creeks. Length 800 m., breadth 700 m. Estimated area 300,000 sq. m. The pop. has been very variously estimated; it appears to be on the whole but thinly inhabited, 3,000,000 being the probable number, which would allow about 10 persons per sq. m. The shores are in general low and often marshy, they are surrounded by numerous islets and rocks. Little is known of the interior except in the dist. of Banjermassin, on the S.E., & a portion of Borneo proper on the N. From recent Dutch authorities & the map of the Baron Melville de Carnbee (1848), it appears that two nearly parallel ranges of mntns. run through the isl. from S.W. to N.E., between which are extensive and well-watered plains. The W. most of these chains rises in the territory of Sarawak, with an elevation of about 3,280 ft., and gradually increases in elevation till it terminates near the N. coast in Mt. Kini Batu, 13,693 ft. in elevation; the second range, which crosses the equator, in about lon. 113° E., appears to be much lower than the former: a cross range leaves the first chain about lat. 2° N., and running S.E. extends through Banjermassin. The chief rivers are, on the N. and W. coast, the Borneo or Brunai, on which is situated the cap. of the isl., and which opens into a bay of same name, in lat. 5° N. The Seriboe which falls into the China Sea, in lat. 2° 10' N. The Batang-lopar, a magnificent river, the mouth of which, 4 m. wide, is in lat. 1° 30' N.; on its l. b., 35 m. from its mouth, is the town of Patusen, which was strongly fortified and held by a band of pirates, but was destroyed by the expedition under Mr Brooke in 1846. The Morotaba or Sarawak, which flows N.E. & N. nearly through the centre of the territory of same name. The Pontianak, formed by the junction of numerous streams, rises about lon. 112° 30', and reaches the sea in lon. 109° 15' on the equator. The Majak opens into a wide estuary in lat. 0° 50' S. On the S. are the Pembuan, Sampet, and Mendawa, in districts of same names, between lon. 112° and 113° 30' E. The Kahajan and Murong, or rivers of the Great and Little Dyaks, & the Banjer or Barito, which rises in the central mntns., lat. 0° 30' N., flows first E. and then S., with a very winding course, and reaches the Java Sea by a wide estuary, in lat. 3° 30' S., lon. 114° 35' E., about 12 m. S. the town of Banjermassin, of which territory it forms the W. boundary. On the E. coast the Koetei forms a wide delta betw. lat. 0° 20' and 1° S., and the Berou reaches the sea by several branches, about lat. 2° N. Most of these rivers are navigable, and, in so far as yet known, their banks are thickly peopled. The only known lake of importance is that of Kini Batu, S.E. of the mntn. of same name, the centre of which is in lat. 5° 40' N., lon. 117° E.: it is about 35 m. long, and 30 m. broad.

The climate is tropical in the interior, but on the N. coast it is quite European. Mineral riches are very valuable: they comprise gold, silver, diamonds, antimony ore, tin, iron, & coal. The chief diamond mines are those of Landak, in the Chinese territory, 50 m. N.E. Pontianak, on river of that name, where, 300 years ago, one of the largest known diamonds, weighing 367 carats, was found. The gold of Sambas yields half a million sterling annually. Excellent coal is worked in several places, especially in Borneo-Propri and Banjermassin, & rich iron mines were discov. in the S.E. angle of the isl. in 1848. The soil is perhaps the most fertile in the world. The forests furnish valuable timber, &, in common with many other isls. of the Archip., the gutta-percha or gutta-tuban tree, the concrete juice of which is now extensively employed in manufactures. Among the vegetable productions are maize, rice, yams, ba-tatas, cocoa-nut, betel, tobacco, cotton, sugarcane, pepper, and other spices and tropical fruits. The animals which have been observed comprise the elephant, rhinoceros, and leopard; the ox, wild hog, and deer and horses; numerous species of monkeys inhabit every part of the island; among these the orang-outang is conspicuous. The Dyaks are the aborigines of Borneo; they are divided into numerous distinct tribes, the chief being those of the interior, or hill Dyaks, and the Dyaks of the coast, many of whom are daring pirates, and cannibalism exists among many of the tribes. The Dyaks of the N. coast have been conquered by the Malays, and are treated by them with great cruelty; those of the interior of the prov. of Banjarmassin, are an independent race, who maintain themselves by the cultivation of rice, by the collection of gold dust, and by traffic; they have no towns, but dwell in small hampongs of from four to ten huts; they have no written language nor religious ceremonies, but are extremely superstitious, and offer human sacrifices at their festivals. The Malay inhabitants have adopted some European customs, and, in the opinion of Sir J. Brooke, are capable of a great degree of civilization. The Chinese, who have long settled on the W. and S. coasts, are industrious and active, and the Dutch, who claim a large interest in the soil of Borneo, carry on an active trade with China and Singapore.

Borneo is divided into many separate states, governed by native chiefs; the best known of these are Brunai or Borneo Proper, which extends over the level space on the N. coast, the sultan of which is now placed under the superintendence of Sir James Brooke. Sambas, Pontianak, Simpang, and Matan, on the W. coast, Banjarmassin on the S., and the territory of the sultan of Sooloo on the E. Off the N. coast of the island, and about 30 m. N.E. Brunai, is the island of Labuan, now belonging to Britain [LABUAN], and on the N. coast, near the N.W. part of the island, is the territory of Sarawak, extending between lat. 1° and 2° N., and lon. 109° 40' and 110° 45' E., bounded W. & S. by the mtns. of Krimbang, and watered by the river Sarawak, and numerous tributaries. This territory enjoys an excellent climate, is rich in mineral and agricultural products, and is admirably situated for trade. The capital is Sarawak (formerly called Kuchin). Pop. (1848) estim. at 12,000, including 150 Chinese. Under the government of Sir James Brooke, the inhabs. of this part of Borneo have commenced a hopeful career of civilization; an English church mission has been established, and a native school built at the town of Sarawak, which, previous to his visit, comprised only a few mud houses, and about 1,500 inhabitants.

The authority of the Dutch extends over a great portion of the island, which they divide politically into the residency of the W. coast, cap. Pontianak, and the residency of the S. and E. coasts, cap. Banjarmassin. By a decree of the governor-general of the Netherlands East Indies, dated 28th February 1846, these possessions are henceforth to form a special government. [BANJERMASSIN-PONTIANAK.] Borneo was discov. by the Portuguese in 1521. The English and Portuguese sev. times attempted to found establishments on its coasts without success. The Dutch had extens. commerc. relations with the W. coast, where they had factories at Soekadana & Pontianak, at the commencement of the 17th century; part of the W. coast was ceded to them by the king of Bantam, in 1780, and they founded the establishment of Pontianak in 1823. The sovereignty of the S. coast was ceded to the Dutch by the sultan of Banjarmassin in 1787: but the most important event in the recent history of Borneo, and one likely to lead to the most beneficial results as regards civilization and commerce, is the enterprize of Sir James Brooke, who first visited the isl. in 1839, & has since been actively engaged in the suppression of piracy, the administration of justice, and the encouragement of commerce and manufactures.

BORNEO, or BRAUNI, cap. prov. of same name, near the N. coast of the island of Borneo, and on l. h. of the riv. Brauni, in lat. 52° 30' N., lon. 114° 52' E. It is built on piles in the river, and defended by batteries. Pop. (1848) 22,000. (?)

BOSMICH, a riv. and village of Persia, prov. Azerbaijan; the riv., an affl. of that which passes Tabriz; & the vill. on its bank, 12 m. E. Tabriz.

BOSNA, a riv. of European Turkey, Bosnia, to which it gives its name; after a tortuous N. ward course of about 150 m., joins the Save, 24 m. E. Brod. Greatest breadth about 400 ft. Principal affls. the Laschra, Krivaga, and Spressa. The towns Jepee, Maglai, and Doboi, are on its banks.

BOSNA SERAI, SERAFO, or SERAJEVO, a town of European Turkey, cap. of the prov. of Bosnia, on the Migliazza, an affl. of the Bosna, 122 m. S.W. Belgrad. Pop. 40,000 (?). It is defended by a strong citadel, and was formerly surrounded by walls, now in ruins: it is the seat of many of the chief authorities of the prov.; has manufs. of fire-arms, jewellery, leather and woollen goods, and is the principal entrepôt for the commerce of Turkey, Dalmatia, Croatia, and S. Germany. In the vicinity are extensive iron mines, and the mineral baths of Serajevsho. The town derives its name from an old palace (Serai) built by Mohammed II., and the inhabitants enjoy a municipal administration, nearly independent of the pacha, who resides at Travnik.

BOSNIA, a prov. of European Turkey, comprising Bosnia Proper, Turkish Croatia, and Herzegovina, situated at the extreme W. part of the empire, between lat. 42° 30', and 45° 15' N., bounded N. and W. by the provs. of Austria, S. by Montenegro and Albania, and E. by Servia. Area estim. at 18,800 sq. m., and pop. at 900,000. Surface almost wholly mntuous, is traversed by the chain of the Dinaric Alps, and covered by its contreforts, and those of the Julian Alps, rising in many places upwards of 6,000 ft. A great part of it is situated in the basin of the Danube, & watered by the Save and its affls., the Verba, Bosna, and Drin. The S. portion (Herzegovina), is watered by the Narenta, an affl. of the Mediterranean. The soil is in general ill suited for cultivation, except in the valley of the Save. On the N. slopes of the Dinaric Alps are extensive forests, yielding valuable timber, and the pasturage is excellent. Wheat, barley, and maize, are raised in sufficient quantity for home consumption, and in the S. districts, flax, tobacco, wines, and olives. Fruits are cultivated in great abundance, especially prunes, of which a species of wine is prepared. The rearing of cattle is an important branch of agriculture; the horses are of an excellent breed, and the sheep furnish a celebrated kind of wool. Croatia is renowned for its honey. The mntns. contain gold mines, which were worked by the Romans, and mines of silver and mercury; but the government permits only the mining of iron, and that of lead in one or two places. Manuf. industry is limited to fire-arms, leather, woollen and cotton stuffs, and gunpowder. Chief exports, leather, hides, wool, goats' hair, honey, cattle, timber, & mineral waters: imports, colonial produce, silks, paper, salt, oil, and dried fruits. Transit trade considerable between Turkey and the Austrian States. The roads are very bad, and in general only practicable for beasts of burden. The Bosniaks are of Slavonian origin, and a good many belong to the Greek church. As a frontier province, Bosnia is one of the most important in the empire; it has a great number of fortifications. Previous to 640 it was governed by independent princes, called Bans or Waiwodes, who became vassals to Hungary. The Turks rendered it tributary in 1463, and it was united to the empire by Soliman II. in 1522.

BOSPHORUS (properly BOSPORUS), or the CHANNEL OF CONSTANTINOPLE, Bosporus Thracicus, a celeb. strait of Turkey, which separates Europe and Asia, and connects the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmara. Length N.E. to S.W. about 17 m., breadth varies from ½ m. to 2 m. Shores generally elevated and very picturesque; on them are the town of Scutari, the castles of Europe and Asia, Bnyukdere, Therapia, Pera, the city of Constantinople, and numerous villas. One of its chief gulfs is the harbour of Constantinople, or the "golden horn."—II. Cimmerian Bosporus, an inlet of the Black Sea, is safe, being deep, and without shoals. [YENIKALE (STRAIT OF).]

BOSTON, a parll. and munic. bor., seaport town and pa. of England, co. Lincoln, pts. Holland, in a rich agricultural district, on the estuary of the Witham, 5 m. from the sea, & 28 m. S.E. Lincoln. Area of pa. 5,220 ac. Pop. 14,618. The town is divided into two nearly equal parts by the Witham, here crossed by an iron bridge of one arch, 86 feet in span; it is well built, paved, and lighted, and abundantly supplied with good water. Its pa. church, built in 1309, is the largest without aisles in the kingdom; length 291 ft.; breadth 99 ft. The tower, 291 feet in height, resembles that of Antwerp cathedral, and forms a landmark visible 40 m. distant. Boston has a grammar school founded in 1554, blue-coat and numerous other schools, a town-hall, formerly belonging to a religious guild, a union poor-house, house of correction, borough gaol, custom-house, large market house & vauxhall, with assembly rooms, 3 public libraries, several banks, manufs. of sail-cloth, canvass, and sacking, 2 or 3 iron foundries, and some shipyards. Owing to neglect in keeping the river clear, the trade became nearly extinct in the last century, but recent improvements now enable vessels of 300 tons to unload in the town, whence the navigation is continued to Lincoln by small steamers and barges. Chief imports, Baltic produce, with coal and manufactured goods coastwise. Chief exports, oats, wool, and woad, which last is extensively produced in the vicinity. Reg. shipping of port (1847), 186 vessels; aggregate burden, 8,768 tons. Customs rev. 40,064. 9s. Mkts. (chiefly for fish, poultry, corn, and wool), Wed. & Sat. It is also a polling-place for the Holland division of the co. In the reign of Edward III., and subsequently, Boston was one of the principal commercial ports of England. Fox, the biographer of the martyrs, was born here in 1517. The town gives the title of Viscount to the Irby family.

Boston, a vill. of Engl., co. York, N. Riding, pa. Bramham, on the Wharfe, 4 m. W.N.W. Tadcaster. Pop. returned with pa. Has a saline spring, & the beauty of its vicinity attracts many visitors.

Boston, the second commercial city and seaport of the U. States, North America, cap. state Massachusetts, co. Suffolk, at the W. extremity of Massachusetts Bay, 207 m. E.N.E. New York. Lat. of state-house, 42° 21' 23" N., lon. 71° 4' 9" W. Pop. (in 1800) 24,937, (in 1840) 93,383, (in 1850) 138,788, exclusive of the suburbs of Charleston, Dorchester, &c., with which it communicates by several long wooden bridges. The city proper is mostly built on a peninsula, 3 m. in length by 1 in breadth, and connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus. Its streets, lined with houses of deep red brick, are irregularly laid out on an uneven surface, yet they generally present a clean, handsome appearance. The quays are very extensive; and the common, consisting of nearly 50 acres, forms a beautiful promenade. Chief edifices, the state-house on Beacon-hill, the city-hall, Faneuil-hall, in which public meetings are held, Faneuil-hall market 536 ft. in length, the Massachusetts hospital, custom-house, co. gaol, houses of industry and correction, Tremont-house hotel, 2 theatres, an atheneum, with a picture gallery and a library of 30,000 vols., an Odeon, and about 100 churches of different sects, several of which are good specimens of architecture. Here are the medical branch of Harvard university, numerous superior schools, & literary, scientific, & charitable institutions, banks and insurance companies. About one-fourth of the population attend schools throughout the year. In 1842, 30 newspapers were published in Boston, 8 of which were daily. The harbour is one of the most commodious in the world, vessels of the largest class approaching the quays; and the bay (which has at its entrance a revolving light 65 ft. in height) is studded with numerous elevated islets, which protect the port from the winds, and furnish convenient sites for forts and fortresses. The city is connected with Worcester, Providence, Lowell, Maine, and other parts of the interior by railways, canals, and navigable rivers, and several British steamships form a packet line between Boston and Liverpool, calling at Halifax, Nova Scotia. Boston is not only the port of the manufacturing region of the U. States, but the great emporium of New England. Imports consist of flour, grain, cotton, staves, coal, tobacco, rice, from most of the states of the Union, and of most kinds of European manufs., wines, brandies, E. and W. Indian produce, from abroad. The chief exports are beef, pork, lard, salted fish, ice, and manufactured goods, as woollens, cottons, paper, boots, and shoes, cordage, hardware, furniture, in the production of which Massachusetts excels all the other states. Value of foreign imports into Massachusetts, in 1841, 20,318,003 dollars. Exports only 11,847,343 dollars; but the exports to the Southern U. S. greatly exceed the imports thence, & leave the general balance of trade in favour of Boston. New York alone is supposed to be at all times its debtor to the amount of 5,000,000 dollars. In 1843 the imports comprised coffee, 18,500,000 lbs.; cotton, 119,670 bales; hides, 310,800; grain, 2,075,000 bush.; flour, 123,506 barl.; brown sugar, 23,655,160 lbs. This city enjoys the largest share of the U. States' trade with India and China. Reg. shipping of port (1841), 227,608 tons, of which 60,759 were employed in the coasting trade, and 7,846 in fisheries. Customs rev. 3,242,189 dolls. Boston, in 1821, adopted a city municipality, and is governed by a mayor, aldermen, and common council chosen annually. The town was founded in 1630, and named after the English town, whence many of its inhabitants had emigrated. The American revolution commenced in Boston, which town took the lead in opposing the taxation of the colonies. In 1775 the Brit. army, 10,000 strong, had possession of the town, but were compelled to withdraw in March 1776. Its inhabitants have since been pre-eminently distinguished amongst their co.-citizens of the U. States for their success in the cultivation of science and literature, as well as their untiring application to commercial pursuits. Dr Benjamin Franklin was born here in 1706, and John Hancock, first President of the American Congress, was a citizen of Boston.—II. a town, New York, 22 m. S.W. Buffalo. Pop. 1,745.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, Gesoriacum, a fortified seaport town of France, cap. arrond., dep. Pas de Calais, on the English Channel at the mouth of the Lianne, and at the head of the railway from Amieus to Boulogne, 139 m. N.N.W. Paris, & 19 m. S.W. Calais. Lat. (of the column) 50° 44' 32" N., lon. 1° 36' 15" E. Pop. (1846) 29,741 (in 1831, 20,866), of whom a great number are English residents. It is divided into the Upper and Lower towns. The first on a hill, whence the English coast is distinctly visible, is well, though irregularly built, and has 2 squares ornamented with fountains, a feudal citadel and ramparts, a modern cathedral, an episcopal palace, a town-hall, and a house in which Le Sage, the author of Gil Blas, lived and died. The Lower, or new town, stretching from the Upper town to the sea, is newly and regularly built and more populous. It has fine public baths, with ball and concert rooms, a comm. college, a theatre, a museum, including a library of 23,000 vols., an hospital, custom-house and barracks. Boulogne has also 2 English churches, several excellent hotels, a great number of boarding schools (both French and English), a school of navigation, tribunal of commerce, societies of agriculture, commerce, & arts: manufs. of coarse woollens, sail cloth, cordage, bottle glass, and earthenware. In its vicinity are important marble quarries. Its fisheries are very extensive, and furnish the chief supply of fish for the Paris markets; but the town is mainly indebted for its prosperity to its English residents, who, since the peace, have resorted thither in great numbers, particularly during the summer. Steamers make the passage to Dover in 3½ hours, and to London in about 12 hours; and the number of passengers who disembarked here annually, prior to 1848, exceeded 50,000. The port is not very easy of access, being formed by two wooden piers stretching out only to low-water mark, but the tide rises upwards of 16 ft., and ships find pretty good anchorage about ½ m. from the harbour. It was on the heights of Boulogne that the Emperor Caligula, A.D. 40, encamped an army of 100,000 men for the fruitless purpose of invading Britain, and here also, in 1804, nearly 18 centuries later, the Emperor Napoleon assembled an army of 180,000 men and a flotilla of 2,400 transports with the same design. The Colonne Napoleon, a column 164 feet high, nearly 1 mile from the town, commemorates the latter futile attempt.

BOUNTY ISLANDS, a small group, S. Pacific Oc., S.E. New Zealand. Lat. 47° 44' S., lon. 90° 7' W.

BOURBON, an isl. of the Mascarene group, Indian O., forming a French colony, cap. St. Denis, in lat. 20° 51' 43" S., lon. 55° 30' 16" E. Length 38 m.; breadth 28 m. Pop. (1847) 108,000, of whom 65,000 were slaves. The island is of volcanic origin, and of an elliptical form. It is traversed from N. to S. by a chain of mtns. which divides it into two portions, differing in formation, climate, and productions; these are on the E. partie du vent (windward) and W. partie sous le vent (leeward) side. The chief summits are the Piton de Neiges, an extinct volcano, 10,100 ft., Grand Benard 9,500 ft., Cimaufef 7,300 ft., and Piton de la Fournaise, an active volcano, 7,218 ft. above the level of the sea. There are no extensive plains, but the mtns. which cover the entire surface are separated by narrow valleys; it is watered by numerous streams, all of which are rapid and none navigable. The climate has recently undergone a great change. Bourbon, which long enjoyed the reputation of being the most healthy spot of the colonial world—an insular paradise—is now visited by the bloody flux and the typhoid fever of Bourbon, which attacks every European after a residence of 4 or 5 years. Neither earthquakes, yellow fever, nor poisonous serpents are known in the island. The heat is not excessive; mean temp. at St. Denis 77° Fahr. Annual average of rain 128 in. Yearly mean of wind 309 days E., 56 days W. Winter, 1st May to 1st October; rainy season, 1st Nov. to 30th April. The prevailing winds drive the rain clouds to the E. side of the island, and often originate the most terrific hurricanes; on such occasions the waves, usually 3 to 4 ft., rise to 50 or 60 ft. in height, and rage with incalculable power, the sky assumes a copper colour, the temp. rises to its maximum intensity, the barom. sinks to its lowest point, rain falls in torrents, & the wind blows with resistless force,—men, animals, trees, and even houses are overturned. Bourbon has no port, & its anchorage is insecure. In 1843-4, 11 large vessels were wrecked near its shores. The soil is very fertile in the vicinity of the coast. The chief products are sugar, coffee, cloves, maize, rice, and tobacco. The corn raised is insufficient for consumption, it is only used by Europeans, and manioc is the chief food of the slaves. Principal exports, sugar, coffee, cloves, dye-woods, and saltpetre; imports wheat, oil, wine, cattle, timber, salt, glass, and manufactured goods. Bourbon was discovered in 1545 by the Portuguese, who called it Mascarenhas, from the name of their chief. The French, who formed a colony in 1655, named it Bourbon, which, under the empire, was changed to Ile Bonaparte. It was occupied by the English in 1810, and restored to France in 1814. The island is divided into the arronds. St. Denis, comprising the great natural division called the "partie du vent," & the arrond. St. Paul, comprising the "partie sous le vent."

BOURBON, several small towns of France.—I. Lancy, dep. Saône-et-Loire, cap. cant., 26 m. W.N.W. Charolles. Pop. 2,848. It has remains of Roman antiquities, mineral springs and baths.—II. Bradford is now the princip. seat of the worsted yarn and stuff manufactures in Engl., and the great mart for the long wools used in these fabrics. In 1838 it had 142 worsted, 9 woollen, and 2 cotton mills, employing together 11,675 hands. In the same year there were in the town upwards of 1,500 power looms, each producing 3 to 4 pieces per week. Its rapid advance is mainly attributable to its central position in the great manufg. district of Yorkshire, and to the abundance of coal and iron in its immediate vicinity. [Bowling and Low Moor.] The Leeds and Liverpool canal connects it with both the Irish and North Seas. Mkt., Thurs. Fairs, Mar. 3, 4, July 17 to 19, and Dec. 9 to 11. BRÄHMAPUTRA ("the son of Brahma," vulg. BURRAMPOOTER), one of the great rivs. of S. Asia, and forming the proper E. boundary of Hindostan. It is supposed to take its origin in Tibet, on the N. side of the Himalaya mntn., about lat.  $30^{\circ}$   $30'$  N., lon.  $82^{\circ}$  E., although some other conjectures would make its source still farther to the E., about lon.  $97^{\circ}$  E. After an E.ward course to about lon.  $95^{\circ}$ , it bends S.ward, and breaks through the Himalaya into upper Assam, where it is joined by the Dihing and Dihong, dividing into two branches, so wide apart as to encircle the isl. Maguli, 50 m. long. The united branch again separates and encloses a larger isl. Kallung, 75 m. in length. It has now a W.ward course throughout Assam to lon.  $90^{\circ}$ , where it again bends S.ward, and after traversing the Bengal dists. Rungpoor, Mymensing, Dacca, and Tiperah, it joins the Bay of Bengal in lat.  $22^{\circ}$   $50'$  N., lon.  $90^{\circ}$   $40'$  E. by an estuary 20 m. in width, in conjunction with the E. and largest arm of the Ganges. Where the Brahmaputra enters the plains of Bengal near Goalpara, it is about 1,200 yards wide, and very rapid. At about  $25^{\circ}$  N. lat., a large branch, the Jena, unites it with the Ganges. Its entire course is estim. at 1,500 m. Princip. tributs. in Bengal, the Soor-mah, Barak, Goomty, Teesta, Megna, the name of which last it assumes after their junction. In Assam, it receives at least 60 affits., and encloses many large isls. Its current is so violent as generally to unfit it for navigation. It inundates the country S. of the Himalaya from April to Sept., discharging into the sea a greater quantity of water than the Ganges. Its banks, considered mostly jungle and marsh lands, are often quite destitute of tracks.

BRAZIL, an extensive empire of S. America, occupying a large proportion of the eastern and central part of that country, extending between lat. 4° 30' N. and 33° S., and lon. 35° & 70° W. Length from N. to S. about 2,600 m., greatest breadth 2,540 m. Its internal boundaries come in contact with all the different states & territ. of S. Amer., with the exception of Chile & Patagonia, while the Atlantic Ocean washes its shores from its N.E. to its S. limits. The empire is divided into 18 provinces, 14 sit. along the shores of the ocean, & 4 in the interior, the relative pop. of which is exhibited in the following table, drawn up according to the most recent and accurate authorities of 1845. The slave pop. is enumerated when accurate returns of them could be obtained separately. In some cases they are not included at all. The number of the aborigines too, is imperfectly ascertained.

The surface of Brazil is about equally divided into uplands and lowlands, or valleys. Two parallel mountain ranges traverse the country from

N. to S., forming elevated ridges of table-land. The greatest height of the central range being from 6,000 to 7,000 ft. Several minor ranges intersect the country, enclosing tracts, some of which are elevated, and others low-lying plains. The N. part of Brazil consists of the greater part of the vast plain through which flows the river Amazon, and its tributaries; & varying in width from 350 to 800 m. The rivers, lakes, and water courses are so numerous, as completely to intersect this great plain, the soil of which is deep & soft, and covered for the most part with dense forests. South E. of this is another plain. The principal rivs. in this direction are the Tocantins, Araguay, Parnahiba, San Francisco, Belmonte, Doce, Paraba do Sul, and Rio Grande do Sul, all of large size, but of difficult navigation, in consequence of rapids, &c. The table-land on the W. is separated from the Andes of Bolivia by a large and extens. plain, traversed by those rivs. which join to form the Madeira; the elev. of this plain is from 1,200 to 1,500 ft. On the banks of the Irituana, & W. ward to the N. branch of the Serra Paricis, extends a sandy and nearly barren desert, called Campos dos Parecis. From 7 lakes (Sete Lagoas) on this table-land rises the river Paraguay, which flows S. ward through a swampy country, and then through the great plain of Paraguay to join the Parana. The latter has a course of 1,000 m., and receives the Rio Grande, the Paranhiba, Sapucahy, Pardo, and many others which flow in a S.E. direction into the Atlantic. The Uruguay flows S. through another table-land of smaller dimensions to the plain of the Misiones. The principal lakes are Patos, an enlargement of the Rio Grande and L. Mirim. Many others of less size are in the W. provinces. The climate of the Amazon valley is of a tropical nature; only the dry & rainy seasons are not very distinctly marked. The nights are cloudless; but in the morning clouds accumulate and continue till the afternoon, when thunder & lightning, with torrents of rain, prevail for two hours, & all again is clear. The climate of Central and W. Brazil is more varied, the heat in the dry season being excessive, while frosty nights are of frequent occurrence in winter; rain in some situations is of rare occurrence. The climate in the valley of the S.E. coast is, notwithstanding its low lat., as genial as that of Italy, being clear and serene, and refreshed by the sea breeze from the E. At Rio Janeiro the ann. mean of Fahr. Therm. is 77°. The shores of the E. coast are generally low-lying, the ground rising gradually behind into the mountain region, which runs parallel to the coast. The harbours are generally good, particularly those of Rio de Janeiro and Bahia. The pop. of Brazil consists of Europeans, whites born in the country, who call themselves Brazilians; Mulattoes; Mamalucoes, or offspring of whites and native Indians; Negroes; Mestizoes, or Zamboes, mixed castes between Negroes & Indians; and the Aborigines, or American Indians. The slave pop. consists of Negroes and mixed breeds. Of the Aborigines, a portion are in a civilized condition, who are styled Cabocloes: the rest are in a savage and unreclaimed state.

There is little political division of castes; and intermarriages among the different races are common. Aboriginal slavery has been legally abolished; and the laws regarding slaves are, on the whole, not severe nor stringent. Thirty-five holidays in the year, besides Saturdays, are allowed to the slave to work for himself; and a slave can demand his liberty on paying a certain sum equal to his value.

There are in Brazil 88 titles of nobility; but these are not hereditary. Little has been done for education throughout the empire; schools, and even school-books are very deficient. The ecclesiastical establishment is also at a low ebb, and many districts are almost wholly deficient of ministers of religion. Roman Catholicism is the prevailing and recognised creed. The exercise of other religions is only tolerated within the domestic circle. The monastic system is greatly on the decline. The country along the coast & the banks of some of the rivs., besides some extensive tracts in Minas Geraes have been brought under cultivation, but it is calculated not l ac. out of 150; so that by far the greater portion of the surface remains in a state of nature. The dense forests furnish almost every variety of useful and ornamental timber, more than 100 species of palms, logwood, mahogany, Brazil, and numerous other dye-woods, with sassafras, sarsaparilla, ipecacuanha, & a great variety of other drugs. Cocoa, caoutchouc, & manioc, are indigenous products; maize, sugar, coffee, cotton, rice, wheat, & tobacco, have been introduced by European culture. The culture of the tea plant was, some years ago, unsuccessfully attempted by a colony of Chinese, in the prov. São Paulo; the yerba maté, or Paraguay tea, is, however, an abundant product of the W. provs. The horse, ox, & sheep, derived from European stocks, have long been naturalized in the country; and vast herds of cattle are reared on all the more open parts. Hides, horns, bones, tallow, and other animal products, form leading articles of the expt. trade. Wild animals comprise the jaguar, hyena, tiger-cat, and other rapacious genera; with the tapir, wild-hog, &c., and a great variety of birds of the richest plumage: the animal as well as the vegetable products here presenting the greatest diversity. The diamond mines of Minas Geraes are the most productive at present known. Eschwege estimated the value of the diamonds produced here, from 1740 to 1822, at 3,475,537*l.* Other gems, and large quantities of gold, besides silver, copper, iron, and platinum, are among the mineral products of the same prov.; these mines are now wrought by the Anglo-Brazilian mining company, organized under the auspices of Don Pedro, in 1825. Manufs. are almost wholly in their infancy in Brazil, being confined to cotton weaving, tanning, and the production of goods of primary necessity; & nearly all branches of industry are performed by slave labour. From its central position in reference to the chf. commer. countries of the globe, & its very extens. line of coast, Brazil is most favourably situated for trade, which, though extens. is not yet nearly commensurate with the resources of the Empire. Expts. from the N. provs. are mostly coffee, cotton, cacao, sugar, and tobacco; from the S., hides, tallow, and other animal products; and from the capital and middle provs., all these, with drugs, diamonds, gold dust, dyes, rice, manioc, tapioca, spirits, rosewood, &c. Coffee is the chief staple, and, in 1838, its expt. was estim. at 778,473 bags, & 3,178 barrels, sent principally to England & the U. States. In the same year 14,470 barrels, 17,426 boxes, and 4,424 bags of sugar, 192,710 hides, 405,792 horns, 14,737 bags of rice, 15,118 do. of flour, 5,472 pipes of spirits, were exported; and 527 ships, aggreg. burden 106,786 tons, cleared out of the several ports, Rio, Bahia, & Maranham, forming more than 3-4ths of the whole foreign commerce, which is chiefly with Great Britain, the U. States, France, Portugal, and the other states of S. America. In 1844, the total value of imports from Great Britain, amounted to 2,413,538*l.*, of which, cotton goods stood for 1,359,991*l.*, other principal articles being woollen and linen goods, hardware and cutlery, iron and steel arms, brass, copper, earthenwares, butter, &c. The imports from the U. States, in 1842, amounted in value to 5,948,814 dolls., consisting mostly of flour and other provisions, and coarse cotton manufs.; the returns were estimated at 2,601,502 dolls., mostly in coffee, sugar, & hides. Duties on impts. in the same year amounted to 12,037,840 dolls., and those on expts. to 3,422,687 do.; the expts. and impts. averaging perhaps from 4½ to 5 millions sterling annually.

The government is an hereditary limited monarchy; the legislative power is vested in a senate of 54 members and a chamber of deputies, the latter elected by free citizens having property to 200 milreas annually. Each member of the legislative receives a salary. Parliaments are quartennial, each sitting lasting 4 months. The justices of the peace are elected by the people in each district. Trial by jury exists in both civil and criminal courts. In Rio and Bahia are superior courts with 8 judges each; & the former city is also the seat of a supreme judicial tribunal, with 12 judges appointed by the crown. Neither titles of dignity, nor seats in the upper chamber, are hereditary. The executive government is in the 6 departments of the emp., justice, foreign affairs, navy, war, and finance. Total expenditure, in 1845-6, amounted to 24,752,758 milreas (2,578,412*l.*): the revenue for the same year having been somewhat less. Public debt (1843), 13,962,477*l.* The standing army, in 1844, consisted of 17,095 men, and the navy of 67 vessels, carrying 350 guns; the latter comprised no ships above the size of a frigate. Brazil was first discovered by Pedro Alvares Cabral, in 1500; and began to be colonized by the Portuguese in 1531. In 1808, King John vi. of Portugal took up his residence in Brazil; and, in 1815, constituted it a kingdom. In 1822 it declared itself an independent state; & it obtained a constitution in 1825. Rio de Janeiro is the cap. of the empire and the seat of government.

BRAZORIA, a small but thriving town of Texas, cap. co. same name, on the Brazos, 22 m. N.W. from its mouth. Pop. 500. A good deal of cotton is shipped here in coasting vessels.

Pop. in 1801, 39,914, and in 1841, 123,188, incldg. parliamentary boundary. Bristol extends over several hills & intermediate valleys. The old city betw. the Avon & Frome is ill-built; and the quarters still further S. are of an inferior character, but all around these are many new streets, squares, & handsome modern residences, especially on the N. and W., in which latter direction is Clifton, comprised in the city liberty. The whole city is well-paved & sewer'd, & plentifully supplied with water. Princip. edifices, the cathed., a beautiful structure, founded in the time of King Stephen, 175 ft. in length, 128 ft. in breadth, & having a tower 140 ft. in height. Of the 19 pa. churches, the most interesting are those of St Mary Redcliff, completed in 1376, & considered one of the finest in Engl.; St James', formerly collegiate; St Stephen's, built about A.D. 1470; St Mark's, now the chapel of the mayor; and the Temple Church. Dissenting places of worship are numerous. Other principal edifices are the guildhall, built in the reign of Richard II.; the new council-ho., jail, and bridewell; the exchange, a building in the Corinthian style, erected at a cost of 50,000*l.*, & used as a corn-mkt.; the commerc. rooms; Bristol institution, with a library & museum; & the infirmary, also with a library & museum, & receiving annually 7,500 patients; the general hospital, instituted 1832, assembly rooms, Victoria rooms, office of the Bristol Steam-Naviga. Co., with a hall used for concerts, &c., the baths and pump-rooms at Clifton, a handsome theatre, and numerous good bridges. In 1841, there were stated to be 598 schools in the city, educating 21,864 pupils; of which 12 were endowed institutions. The gramm. school, founded in 1532, has several small exhibitions, & 2 fellowships of 30*l.* a-year each, in St John's Coll., Oxford. Queen Elizabeth's hospital educates 100 boys, and has a rev. of nearly 5,000*l.* a-year. Colston's three schools are perhaps next in importance. Alms-houses, & medical, & other benevolent institutions are very numerous; the endowed charities are estimated at 23,000*l.*, and it is estim. that between 12,000*l.* & 15,000*l.* of voluntary contributions are distributed annly. on account of various charities. Bristol has a new proprietary college belonging to the Baptists, a school of medicine, a public library with 30,000 vols., law and medical libraries, and a mechanics' institution. It long ranked as the second commerc. emporium of Engl., but its progress has not kept pace with that of other ports, more advantageously placed as outlets of great manufacturing districts. It has, however, large iron and brass foundries; copper, tin, zinc, and glass works; chemical and colour works; sugar refineries & distilleries; and considerable manufs. of pins, shot, china, earthenwares, soap, leather, tobacco, cottons, hats, and floorcloths, with extensive estab. for ship-building; and in its vicinity are large brick and coal works. The Avon at Bristol, though narrow, is deep enough for large ships, & early in the present cent., its course was turned for some distance, at a cost of 700,000*l.*, & its old channel now forms a harb., furnished with locks & quays 6,000 ft. in length. Ships of large burden, and first-rate steamers, load & discharge cargo at Kingroad, in the month of this riv. The city retains a large share of the West India trade. Imports, consisting chiefly of sugar, molasses, rum, coffee, tobacco, with wool, turpentine, hemp, timber, wine, and brandy, from N. & S. America, the Baltic, & France. Exports, consist mainly of the before-mentioned manuf. goods to foreign ports, & of colonial produce to Irel. Value of British & Irish produce exported in 1845, 216,778*l.* In 1845, 432 Brit. & foreign ships, aggreg. burden 96,764 tons entered; and 243 do., burden 69,000 tons cleared out of the port. Customs rev. (1846) 911,314*l.* 13s. Reg. shipping (1847) 295 vessels, aggreg. burden 38,914 tons. Bristol communicates by railw. with Birmingham and Exeter, with the Thames, &c., by the Kennet and Avon canal. It was the first port in Britain, whence regular steam communic. with the U. States was estab.; & the "Great Britain" steam ship was built at Bristol. It has a chamber of commerce & sev. mercantile corporate bodies; & it lately had 6 banking companies. In 1848 it was made a free port. The city is divided into 10 wards, and governed by a mayor, 16 aldermen, and 48 councillors. Its corporation has jurisdiction on the Avon from 4 m. above the city down to the sea, & along the channel to Clevedon; also the right to license pilots for num. ports on the Bristol channel. Corp. rev. (1843) 49,176*l.*; (1846-7) 48,483*l.*; expend. 53,300*l.* Mkts. daily, that on Thurs. for cattle. Fairs for horses, leather, &c., Mar. 1 & Sept. 1. Spring assizes for civil causes, qtr. sessns., sheriff's & other courts are held here. Bristol belongs to Clifton & Bedminster poor-law union. Under Henry VIII. it was made a bshp's see, lately united with that of Glo'ster. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1846) 11,932. It was a fortified city as early as the 5th cent.: in Norman times it had a castle built by the E. of Glo'ster, son of Henry I. In 1831 it was the scene of a violent riot, during which its episcopal palace & many other buildings were destroyed. Among its distinguished natives may be noticed Sebastian Cabot, Chatterton, Southey, & the sculptor Bayley. Bristol confers the title of Marq. on the Hervey family. The scenery in the vicin., especially at Hotwell saline spring, is exceedingly beautiful.

BRISTOL, a seaport town of U. S., N. Amer., Maine on the Atlantic, 29 m. S.S.E. Augusta. Pop. 2,945. It has numerous vessels employed in the coasting trade & fisheries.—II. a seaport, Rhode Isl., cap. co. with a good harb., on Narragansett Bay, 18 m. S.E. Providence. Pop. 3,490. Reg. shipping in 1840 15,890 tons.—III. a tnsbp., Connecticut, co. & 17 m. S.W. Hartford. Pop. 2,109, who manuf. clocks & buttons.—IV. New York, co. Ontario, 212 m. W. Albany. Pop. 1,953.—Smaller tnsbps. of this name, are in Vermont, New Hampshire, &c.—V. a co. in S. part of Massachusetts, on coast of Atlantic Ocean. Area 600 sq. m. Pop. 60,164.

BRISTOL BAY, an inlet of the Pacific Ocean, Russian Amer., between Cape Newnham and the penins. Aliashka. Lat. about 54° N., lon. 160° W. Its discovery is assigned to Captain Cook.

BRISTOL CHANNEL, an arm of the Atlantic, entering between St Ann's Head on the N. and Land's End on the S., extending into the S.W. part of Great Britain, between lat. 50° & 51° 40' N., & lon. 3° & 5° 30' W., bounded N.ward by S. Wales, & S. by the Engl. cos. Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. At its E. extremity it terminates in the estuary of the Severn, besides which riv. it receives the Parret, Taw, Torridge, Taff, and Towy. Sandy isl., with light-house, is in the mouth of the channel, & the towns of Ilfracombe, Combe-Martin, Watchet, Swansea, Kidwelly and Tenby are on its coasts. It contains Milford haven, Carmarthen Bay, and Swansea Bay on the N., and Barnstable, Porlock, and Bridgewater Bay on the S. Its tides flow rapidly upward, & meeting with the currents of the Severn, cause the phenomenon called the bore.

BRISTON, a pa. of Engl., co. Norfolk, on the Bure, 3½ m. S.S.W. Holt. Area 2,450 ac. Pop. 963. Fairs, May 26, Oct. 11.

BRITAIN, or GREAT BRITAIN, including Engl. & Scotl., is the largest isl. of Europe, & the principal of the group of the British Isles, bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean, on the S. separated from France by the English Channel; bounded on the W. by the Irish Sea, and on the N.W. by the Atlantic Ocean. Its extreme length extends from lat. 50° to 58° 40' N., or about 587 m.; its greatest breadth from lon. 5° 45' W. to 1° 45' E., or about 360 m. In general form it is wedge-shaped, being broadest at its S. extremity, and narrowest at its northern. Its eastern coast forms a waving continuous & rarely broken line, but the western coast is extremely irregular, and deeply indented with many bays and arms of the sea, interspersed with numerous isls. The S.E. part of Britain is a level alluvial surface; the centre undulating and hilly; the western and N.western mntnous and irregular. In the N. & W., primary strata and granite rocks prevail, in the middle districts, coal, lime, salt, & ironstone are abundant, and these are succeeded in England, on its E. and S.E. valleys, by oolite chalk and the newer geological formations. A mntn. range, more or less elevated, extends from S. to N. of the isl., running through Cornwall, Devonshire, Somersetshire, and thence through Wales, varying in elev. from 1,500 to 3,500 ft. Another branch extends from the Cotswold hills, Gloucestershire, and runs through Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Yorkshire, Cumberland, Westmoreland, & Northumberland, with elev. from 2,000 to 3,000 ft.; succeeding these are the Cheviots, the Lammermoors, & the great Grampian range which intersect Scotland, & whose extreme altitude is measured by Ben Nevis on the W., & Ben Macduin on the N.E., both attaining an elev. of upwards of 4,300 ft. The most consid'ble rivs. are the Severn, Medway, Dee, Mersey, Clyde, on the W. coast; & the Thames, Trent, Humber, Tyne, Forth, Tay, & Spey on the E. coast. The principal lakes are those of Cumberland & Westmoreland in Engl., and L. Lomond, Tay, Maree, &c., in Scotl. The princip. bays & estuaries are the Bristol Channel, Cardigan B., Lancaster B., the Solway Firth, Firth of Clyde on the W., & the Thames mouth, the Wash, the Humber, the Firths of Forth, Tay, Murray, and Cromarty on the E., while on the S. there are Falmouth, Plymouth, Portsmouth, and other important bays and harbours.

The British Islands include Ireland, the Isle of Wight, Anglesea, Man, the Scilly isls., Bute, Arran, the Hebrides, Orkney and Shetland isls. The climate of Britain is greatly modified by its insular situation, the extremes both of summer & winter temperature being much less than that of corresponding latitudes on a continental surface. The mean ann. temp. is about 49° Fahr. The extreme summer heat seldom exceeds 80° Fahr., & the winter cold, with rare exceptions, does not extend beyond 25° to 32°. The ann. fall of rain averages about 32 inches. Most rain falls on the W. side of the isl. (from 36 to 40 inches), the E. coast being comparatively dry (25 inches), but a cold N.E. and E. wind prevails more on the E. coast, while a warm W. and S.W. blows on the W.; from this reason, joined to the nature of the soil & elev. of the surface, the eastern half of the isl. is more an agricultural, while the W. is more a grazing country. Though variable, the climate of Britain is found, from tables of longevity, to be one of the most salubrious in the world, while the very general cultivation and drainage of the soil have removed those maladies that originate in marsh effluvia. Within the last century the average longevity of the pop. has been greatly increased. In 1800 the aver. mortality in Engl. was 1 in 32, in 1847 1 in 45. The area of Brit. is 88,050 sq. m., or excluding water 55,943,680 ac., being 212 persons to the acre, including Irel. the total area is 120,562 sq. m., or 76,121,126 ac., and 224 persons to the acre. In 1710 the pop. of Engl. & Scotl. amounted to 6,116,337; in 1801 to 10,942,646, in 1821 the pop. of the united kgdm. including Irel. was 21,202,966; in 1831, 24,410,429; in 1841, 27,019,558; & at the same rate of increase in 1847 would amount to about 30,000,000. The indigenous vegetn. of Brit. partakes of the character of that of the contig. parts of Europe. All the grains & grasses & the common European fruits grow in almost all districts & situations, not too elevated, & both agricul. & horticult. have been brought to a great degree of perfection. The breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, & other useful animals are also of the best description. Of wild animals the fox, badger, wild cat, stoat, martin, otter, squirrel, hedgehog, dormouse, mole, mouse, hare, & rabbit, are the principal. The wolf, bear, beaver, & wild ox have become extinct for sev. cents. The stag & fallow deer are still abundant in sev. localities. The great bustard & capercaillie are the only birds known to have become extinct in Britain. The bittern, eagle, & other birds of prey are becoming daily more rare. Annual amount of British mineral products:

	Quantity.	Value.
Silver, . . . . .	15,000 lbs. Troy.	45,000l.
Copper, . . . . .	13,000 tons.	1,200,000
Tin, . . . . .	5,000 "	550,000
Lead, . . . . .	30,000 "	1,000,000
Iron (1845), . . . . .	2,200,000 "	12,000,000
Coal, . . . . .	34,000,000 "	14,000,000
Salt, Alum, &c., . . . . .		1,000,000
Total, . . . . .		20,795,000l.

The total amount of land under cultiv. & pasture in the united kgdm. has been roughly estim. at 48,779,000 ac., of this 22,772,000 ac. are supposed to be ann. under crop, gardens, &c.; the amount of corn, after deducting seed, is estimated at 54,232,000 qrs.; and the total value of agricul. produce, 227,771,548l. The annual value of real property assessed to the property-tax in Great Britain in 1843 was 95,284,497l. The gross rental of Ireland (1832) amounted to 12,715,478l., forming a total of 107,999,975l. An approximate estimate of the gross annual produce of Brit. manufs. makes the value 121,750,000l. In 1800 the ann. exports of British & Irish produce amounted to 35,903,000l.; & the exports of foreign & colonial produce to 7,271,000l., being a total of 43,174,000l. The imports for same year amounted to 24,066,000l. In 1848 the British and Irish exports were 58,738,000l., the foreign & colonial 14,387,000l., total 72,703,000l. The impts. for same year amounted to 82,886,000l. The total number of mercantile shipping of Gt. Britain in 1848, amounted to 30,983, tonnage 3,686,387, and number of men 218,977; do. of Ireland 2,319 vessels; tonnage 265,536. During the last 40 years Gt. Britain has been traversed in every direction by railroads, 13,600 m. having been sanctioned by Act of Parl., & a considerable portion of this completed. The total capital authorised by Parl. to be raised, amounts to 320 millions. An almost instantaneous communic. by electric telegraph, has also been estab. throughout a dist. of 1,767 m. Of other associated industrial companies, the investments are in mining cos., 9,978,747l.; gas cos., 6,415,295l.; assurance cos., 6,000,000l.

Nothing is known historically of Brit., before the invasion of Cæsar, except a few obscure allusions, abt. 55, b.c. It is conjectured to have been originally peopled from the adjoining continent, first by the Celts from Gaul, and afterwards by Teutonic tribes from Germany & Scandinavia. The original Gaelic name Albion ("white Isl."), is supposed to be derived from the appearance of its chalk cliffs. Britin formed by the Romans into Britannia, is conjectured to have been the name of the people, signifying a divided or separated nation. The Britons were at this period in a semi-barbarous state; but warlike, & possessed of moral courage & great bravery. After the invasion of Cæsar, the Romans did not return to Britain for about a century. The conquests were again resumed by Claudius, & under successive emperors & generals, especially Agricola, Antoninus Pius, Severus, Caracalla; it was subdued & occupied till about A.D. 420, when it was finally abandoned by the Romans. Agricola built a wall & series of forts between the firths of Forth & Clyde, in order to bound the empire & defend it from the invasions of the Caledonians. Adrian further circumscribed the Roman boundaries, by erecting a mud wall from the Solway Firth to the Tyne in Northumberland, & about the beginning of 3d cent., Severus built a stone wall in the same direction, portions of which still remain. It was 68 m. long, 12 ft. high, & 8 feet in thickness. There was a deep ditch on the N. side, & a road on the S., with 18 turrets & castles, at intervals, along the line. After the termination of the Roman power, the conquest of the greater part of Britain was made by the Saxons, Jutes, & Angles, the latter giving their name to England; this conquest occupied about 130 years. In 1066 the Normans made a descent on Engl. & possessed themselves of a great part of the country. In 1172 Ireland was subdued, & came under British government. In 1215 Magna Charta was obtained by the Barons. In 1283 Wales was united to England. In 1604 the accession of James VI., united the crown of Scotland to that of England. A civil war in Britain terminated in the execution of Charles I. in 1649. William III. was called to the throne after the revolution of 1688. The legislative union of Scotland & England took place in 1707. The American war began in 1776 and terminated 1784. The French revolution and war with France began in 1793, & terminated by the battle of Waterloo, June 15, 1815. The legislative union of Ireland with Britain, took place in 1799. In 1829 the catholic emancipation Act was passed; & a reform of the British parliamentary representation was effected by the Act of 1832. The govern. of the united kingdom is a limited monarchy. The legislative authority is vested in the sovereign, & the parl. or Houses of Lords & Commons, the concurrence of all which estates is necessary to the enactment of new laws, or to the repeal of those already in force. The monarchy is hereditary, under certain limitations. The house of peers consisting of the Lords spiritual & temporal, is at present composed of 3 princes of blood-royal, 2 archbishops, 20 dukes, 20 marquises, 117 earls, 22 viscounts, 24 Engl., & 4 Irish bshps., 198 barons, peers of Engl., with 16 Scottish & 28 Irish representative peers,—in all 454 mems. The H. of C. (1849) is composed of 656 mems., of whom 143 sit as representatives of Engl. cos., 4 for the 2 univs. of Oxford & Cambridge, & 322 for Engl. cities & bors.,—in all 469 mems. for Engl. 15 mems. represent the Welsh cos., & 14 the cities & bors. of Wales; 30 mems. the cos., & 23 the cities & burghs of Scotland; 64 mems. the cos., and 39 for the cities & bors. of Ireland, & 2 mems. sit for the univ. of Dublin. Right of voting for county mems. in Engl. & Wales, is in all freeholders possessing land inherited, or if purchased in actual occupation of the value of 40l. yearly, and of estate for life of 10l. a-year under any circumstances; also tenants of land paying 50l. rent; and in Scotland and Ireland, in freeholders of 10l. per annum, and tenants, leaseholders, and copyholders nearly as in Engl. Right of voting for bor. representatives, is uniformly in occupiers of buildings with land to the value of 10l. yearly, besides certain parties possessed of anc. privileges. Total constituency of Great Britain. in 1846-8, was counties 468,258, cities and bors. 328,686; Welsh cos. 37,092, hors. 9,665; Scotch cos. 50,351, hors. 42,943; Irish cos. 65,275, hors. 64,057; total 1,066,327 electors. The cabinet council for carrying on the business of the state is composed of the president of the privy council, the lord high chancellor, first lord of the treasury, lord privy seal, chancellor of the exchequer, three secretaries of state, viz., home, foreign, and colonial affairs, the commander-in-chief of the forces, first lord of the admiralty, presids. of the boards of control (India), and of trade, sec. at war, & the paymaster-general. The courts of law and local government vary in different divisions of the empire; but each co. throughout the kingdom is governed by a lieutenant, sheriff, and other officers appointed by the crown. The episcop. form of church government, of which the sovereign is the head, is the state estab. religion in England & Ireland, and the presbyterian form that of Scotland. There is, however, the most complete toleration of all other religious sects throughout the empire. The most perfect degree of personal freedom is guaranteed in Britain by the Habeas corpus act, which secures to the suspected prisoner a trial or liberation within a limited time,—the trial by jury, the liberty of the press, liberty of conscience, the right of franchise, & the total abolition of slavery. Each city & munic. bor. has the election of its own separate corporate officers. The colonies have each a governor appointed by the crown; & who is assisted in each of the Brit. N. Amer. colonies by a council and legislative assembly, as also in each of the W. India isls., except St Lucia & Trinidad. These two isls., and Brit. Guiana, Gibraltar, Malta, the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, the Mauritius, and Hong Kong, are placed under a governor and council, and the orders of the sovereign in council; the Guinea settlements, all the Australasian colonies, the Falkland isls, and St Helena are ruled by a governor, council, and British acts of parl.; and Honduras is governed by a superintendent and magistrates. In 1792 the British army at home and abroad amounted to 57,252; in 1815 to 250,514; in 1848 to 138,769, of which 24,922 were under the pay of the E. I. Co. In 1848 the navy of Great Britain amounted to 671 vessels, of these 243 were in commission, incldg. 98 steamers for service of all kinds, with a power equal to 22,122 horses, 45,000 seamen and marines. About two-thirds of the public rev. of the united kingdom is derived from duties of customs and excise; the remainder from stamps, post office, and assessed and income taxes. The annual rev., including expence of collecting from 1841 to 1848, has varied from 54 millions to 57 millions, of this sum about 28 millions are required for defraying the expenses of national debt. The national debt at the revol. in 1688, amounted to 664,263l.; at the commenc. of the American war in 1775, it amounted to 128 millions. In 1817 it amounted to 840 millions, & in 1848 to 777 millions.

The British Empire is the most powerful and extensive in the world, comprising, together with a vast extent of actual territory in all quarters of the globe, a pop. inferior in amount only to that of the Chinese Empire. Its great subdivisions, with their area and pop., may be thus estimated.

(1846) 268,943, of whom 245,000 were Protestants, and the remainder Roman Catholics and Jews. Besides this, the reigning duke possesses the princip. of Oels in Silesia, with an area of 817 sq. m., and a pop. of 90,000. The state is composed of 3 large and 6 small isolated and irregular portions of territory. The principal part, with the cap. city, lies betw. Prussia and Hanover; the 2d extends E. to W. along the S. bound. of Hanover, limited on the E. by Prussia, and W. by the Weser; the 3d lies S.W. of the above, between

Prussia, Hanover, and Anhalt. The smaller portions lie partly in Hanover, & partly in Prussia; but, with the exception of Thedinghausen, they are not far distant from the capital. The whole territory has an area of 1,526 sq. m. The country is mntnous. in the 2 S. portions, which are partly traversed by the ramifications of the Harz mntns.; the Worm-Berg, 3,230 ft. in elev., is the highest point in the duchy. It is not abundantly watered; the Ocker flows N. past Brunswick; the Leine at Gandersheim, and the Weser on the extreme W. limits of the territory; there are several small lakes in the Harz, and mineral springs at Helmstädt and Seesen. The climate is rigorous in the Harz, where harvest is a month later than in the rest of the territory. Agriculture is the chf. source of the wealth of the duchy. The valleys are in general fertile, and the principal products are estim. as follows:—grass, including rye, barley and oats, 575,000 qrs.; seed-oil 1,200 tons, flax 4,500 tons annually, and tobacco, chiccory, hops, & fruits, are raised extensively for export. Cattle-breeding is important, great care is bestowed in the improvement of horses, for which there is a stud in Harzburg, and the sheep are of improved breeds. Timber forms a considerable article of export. Mining is extensively carried on in the Harz mntns.; its chf. products are gold, silver, lead, litharge, copper, sulphur, vitriol, and alum. The iron-works employ 9 smelting-houses and 10 furnaces; marble and alabaster are also procured. The manufs. of Brunswick are not important, and are limited chiefly to tobacco, paper, soap, sal-ammoniac, and madder, linen and woollen weaving and spinning, & the manuf. of lacquered wares, glass, and beer. Trade is active, and is much facilitated by the 2 ann. fairs at Brunswick, & by railways to Hanover, Magdeburg, and Neustadt. There are few learned institutions in the duchy, the university of Helmstädt is long since given up, but there is a college at Brunswick, an anatomical school, 5 gymnasias, 2 normal schools, 22 burger, 7 indust., and 435 parish schools. The library of Wolfenbüttel is celeb. Brunswick belongs with Hanover, to the German commercial union. The gov. is exercised by a hereditary duke, & based on the constitution of 1832, with a single legislative chamber, composed of 8 deputies of the nobility, 12 from the towns, 10 from the rural dists., & 13 from the genl. pop. The court of appeal at Wolfenbüttel is the highest legal tribunal. Since 1833 the duchy has been div. into the 6 circs., Brunswick, Helmstädt, Wolfenbüttel, Blankenburg, Gandersheim, and Holzminden. Publ. rev. for the 3 years, 1846-48, estim. at 3,768,822 dolls., besides 170,000 florins from the mediatised principality of Oels. Public debt (1845) 6,444,349 dollars, of which 1,725,000 dolls. was on account of railways. It is the most important city in the kingdom, and the chief seat of public instruction and industry, the resid. of the courts, the seat of the legislative assemblies, courts of appeal, & chamber of commerce. Brussels is remarkable for the number & richness of its anc. buildings; and from the elegance of its new quarters, it ranks among the finest cities of Europe. It consists of an upper or new, & a lower or old town, the former of which is the fashionable quarter, and contains the royal palace, the gov. offices, and the finest streets & hotels; it is well supplied with water, & has many richly sculptured fountains. Its principal squares are the Place Royale, Place de la Monnaie, with the mint, theatre, & exchange, the Place des Martyres, where the victims of the revolution of 1830 are interred, the Grand Place in the lower town, in which is the Hôtel de Ville, a noble gothic edifice, in the grand hall of which, the abdication of Charles v. took place in 1555. The present modern edifices are the palace of the chambers, the king's palace, the palace of the fine arts, formerly resid. of the dukes of Brabant, & of the gov.-general of Austria, rebuilt in 1746, & now occupied by the public library & museum; the former palace of the prince of Orange, remarkable for its interior decorations; the church of Notre-dame-de-Bon-Secours, and that of Grand-Béguinage, both of the 17th cent., and the theatre. The anc. buildings comprise the Hôtel de Ville, one of the noblest buildings of the kind in Europe, with a spire of open stone work 364 feet in height, sev. churches, in general decorated with rich sculptures & paintings, the finest of which is the cathed. of St. Gude, built 1273, & celeb. for its painted glass, numerous statues, and a finely carved pulpit; the church of Notre-dame-de-la-Chapelle, commenced 1134, & that of Notre-dame-des-Victoires of the 13th cent., the Broot-Huys, or old Hôtel de Ville, & sev. gates of its anc. walls. The finest promenades are the Allée-Verte, along the canal from Brussels to the Scheldt, & the park, an extens. enclosure, near the royal palace, laid out with avenues of trees, & ornamented with statues. This was the scene of the chief struggle in the revolution of 1830. A statue to Godefroid de Bouillon was inaugurated in 1848. 3 m. N. is the country palace of Laeken. Brussels has num. & excellent estab. of public instruction, a free university founded 1834, a primary normal school, polytechnic school, an acad. of painting, sculpture, and engraving, a royal school of music, a school of deaf, dumb, & blind, estab. 1834, and numerous primary schools & schools of industry. Among its rich scientific and literary estab. is the astronomical observatory, one of the finest in Europe, & a magnet. observ., the depôt-génl., for the archives of the kgdm.; the public library containing 100,000 vols., & the royal library (founded 1837) 70,000 vols., & 25,000 MSS. The museum of painting, nat. history, & antiquities, & an excellent botanic garden. It has an academy of belles-lettres, an exhibition of paintings, and another for the productions of national industry. Among its private collections are the library of the Bollandists, 6,000 vols., & that of the geographical estab. of M. Ph. Vandermaelen, founded 1830, containing 20,000 vols., & a rich collection of maps, in connexion with a school of geography, and a museum of nat. history. Brussels is the seat of the princip. banks, & of the only mint of the kingdom, and has a savings bank, and many wealthy charitable institutions; it is one of the great centres of Belgian industry, and it is still celeb. for its lace, considered the finest in the world; its other chief manufs. are of fine linens, damask, silk & cotton ribbons, gold & silver embroidery, hats, paper, machinery, jewellery, and mathematical and musical instruments. It has also estab. for coach building & cabinet making, manufs. of chemical products, soap, porcelain, & crystal, extens. sugar refineries & breweries. It has many extens. typographical & lithographic estab., which are chiefly employed in reprints of works published in France. The commerce of Brussels is facilitated by a canal, which connects it with Antwerp, and admits vessels of 300 tons burden, by excellent roads, & by railw., which radiate from it in every direction. Brussels is a very anc. city; it is believed to have been founded in the 7th cent.; it was fortified in the 11th cent., & was the resid. of the Dukes of Brabant, & afterwards of the Spanish and Austrian gov.-general of the Netherlands; its fortifs. were dismantled by Joseph II. It was, under the French empire, cap. of the dep. of the Dyle; previous to 1830, it was one of the caps. of the kingdom of the Netherlands, and alternately with the Hague, the seat of the court & of the states-general; it is the birth-place of the physicians Vesalius & Van Helmont, and of the two painters Champaigne.

BUENOS AYRES, a republic of S. Amer., & the most important of the Plata confed. It extends from the Rio Negro or Cusu on the S. (Lat.  $41^{\circ} S.$ ), along the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Rio de la Plata, and along the whole southern shores of its estuary, and the S. banks of the Parana, as far as the Arroyo del Medio riv., which separates it from Santa Fé (about lat.  $33^{\circ} S.$ ).

The W. boundary extends from the mouth of the Neposta riv. in a N.E. direction, to the W. extremity of the Sierra del Vulcan. Area estim. at about 75,000 sq. m. Pop. 200,000 (?) The N. part includes a portion of the eastern Pampas, & is flat, with lakes and swamps. The S. part comprehends the Sierra del Vulcan, the S.E. the Sierra Ventana. Princip. rivs. the Saldana, Salta, Quequin. Climate of N. part mild,—ice seldom occurs; mean summer heat  $90^{\circ}$ . The N. winds prevailing here have the disagreeable character of the sirocco of Italy; the S.W. winds or pampeiros are hurricanes accompanied with thunder. In S. dist. the climate is colder, but healthy. There is sufficient rain in general throughout both districts, but occasionally there are years of excessive and destructive droughts. The soil is fertile in many places, but there is not a thousandth part under cultiv. Cattle and their produce are the chief sources of wealth. Number of black cattle on pampas said to exceed 1 mill. Hides, hair, horns, tallow, and jerked beef are the exports. Horses, mules, and asses are also exported, and of late the breed of sheep has been improved, and wool has formed an article of export. Formerly the cultivation of the soil was so neglected that grain was required from abroad; now, wheat is exported to some extent. Buenos Ayres became independent of the Spanish government in 1810, and along with the neighbouring states joined in a confederated republic (the Argentine or La Plata), which however was not long kept up, and now each state has a separate and independent administration. The executive is vested in a governor or capt.-general elected for five years, aided by a council of ministers chosen by the governor. The junta or legislative assembly consists of 44 deputies, one half renewed annually by popular election. But under Rosas all constitutional government has been annulled, and the liberty of the press restricted. A chain of forts has been established along the W. boundary to overawe the Indian pop.

BUENOS AYRES ("good air"), the cap. city of the republic of same name, is situated on the S. side of the Plata estuary, about 150 m. from the sea, opposite the town Colonia. Lat.  $34^{\circ} 35' 5'' S.$ , lon.  $58^{\circ} 22' W.$  Pop. in 1825, 81,000 (?), almost wholly of Spanish or other European descent. It covers a surface of about 2 m. in length by  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. in greatest breadth, and is regularly laid out, all its streets crossing each other at right angles, and now mostly paved with granite. Almost all its houses are but one story in ht., flat-roofed, and built around courtyards. Most of the better sort have gardens attached, and the city is ornamented by cotton, olive, and other plantations. It is ill provided with water, which is wholly brought by carriers from the river. Principal publ. edifices are its churches, most of which are, however, unfinished. The cathed. is a domed building in the great square, in which are also the city hall, a double range of shops fronted by a colonnade, and an obelisk commem. the declaration of independence. In the Franciscan church is a good painting by a native artist. Buenos Ayres has sev. convents, a protestant church, a presbyterian chapel, a founding hospital, orphan asylum, all built of a fine white stone quarried near the city. The resid. of the dictator and the government offices are in a fort near the riv. The university occupies an extens. building, and has a library of 25,000 vols.; besides which there are a superior academy, a military college, various publ. schools, several printing establishments, and manufs. of cigars, carpets, furniture, boots and shoes. The navigation of the Plata, here 36 m. broad, is difficult; and ships drawing 16 ft. water are obliged to anchor in the Amarradero, a roadstead 7 or 8 m. distant, to and from which merchandise has to be conveyed by lighters & rude ox-carts. Trade considerable and increasing. In 1837 its exports amounted in value to 5,637,138 dolls., including ox-hides, val. 3,294,540 dolls., with the precious metals, jerked beef, sheep's wool, skins, tallow, horse hair, &c. Total value of imports in same year, 7,000,000 dolls. (1,487,000.), including cotton, linen, woollen, & other manuf. goods & colonial produce from G. Britain; jewelry, perfumery, & articles of luxury from France, various goods from the other European states, & coarse cloths, provisions, soap, candles, furniture, and deals from the U. States. The trade with Chile and Peru is comparatively insignificant. The export of wool and corn has latterly increased; that of Paraguay tea has declined, with the progressive increase in the import of tea with other goods from China. In 1843 the total value of exports was estim. at 1,659,206*l.*; and in 1844, 52 ships, aggreg. burden 10,005 tons entered the port. Buenos Ayres was founded in 1534; in 1776 it became the seat of a vice-royalty. In 1806 it was taken by the English, but it was retaken by the Spaniards in the same year.

Princp. edifices, 17 churches, the court-ho., theatre, markets, & city-offices, the orphan asylum, university, lyceum, and some excellent hotels. Its stores compete in appearance with those of New York; & Buffalo has manufs. of woollens and felt, saw-mills, and a large transit trade,—its communication with the Hudson riv. by the Erie canal, having rendered it the great depôt for the trade between the W. States and the Atlantic. Its harb., formed by Buffalo creek, has a stone pier, 1,500 ft. in length, and terminated by a lighthouse; it admits vessels drawing 8 ft. water, & is generally crowded with steamers and other craft, though, on the breaking up of the ice it suffers inconveniences.

The ann. quantity of merchandise forwarded E.ward to other states by way of the port is 177,000 tons. Buffalo communicates by railw. with Black-rock and Niagara falls. It was burnt by the English in 1814, but since the opening of the Erie canal, it has risen into one of the most thriving cities in the whole union.—II. a tnsHP., Missouri, co. Pike. The town is clean and handsome, but damp and cold, with many characteristics of an old Castilian city; it is built in the form of an irreg. semicircle, portions of its old walls remaining on the side of the riv., which is here crossed by 3 fine stone bridges. Its cathed. is one of the finest in Spain, and contains much exquisite workmanship. Burgos has numerous other churches, and a Franciscan convent, worthy of notice, a nunnery with peculiar privileges, a castle, formerly very strong, but now in ruins, various hospitals & charit. institutions, a bronze statue of Charles III. in a square surrounded by arcades, besides a triumphal arch in memory of Ferdinand Gouzales, & a monument to "the Cid," both natives of this city. Around it are some handsome promenades, and not far off is the monastery of Miraflores, with the magnificent tombs of John II. and his Queen. Burgos is an archbishop's see, and the seat of a college, a school of surgery, and some manufs. of leather, woollens and hats. Its trade in manuf. goods and its fairs, &c., have, however, greatly declined; its present importance is now chiefly due to its being on the high road from Madrid to the French frontier. It was taken by the French in 1808 and in 1809.

Estim. capital employed in manufs. (1840) 84,408 dollars.

BURMAH, or BERMAH, the Burmese Empire, or kingdom of Ava, a state of Further India, & formerly the most extensive & powerful in that penins.; but, since the war of the Burmese with the British in 1824-6, its territories have been comprised within lat. 16° and 27° N., and lon. 93° & 99° E., having W. Aracan and Munipoor, N. the Nagas territory and Upp. Assam, E. the Chinese prov. Yun-nan, the indep. Laos country, and the British prov. Martaban (from which last it is separated by the Sa-luen or Than-lweng riv.), and S. the Gulf of Martaban, a portion of the Bay of Bengal. Estimated area 200,000 sq. m., & pop. from 2 to 3 millions. It is composed of the kgdms. of Burmah, Pegu, & Pong, with portions of the countries inhabited by the Khyen, and the Shan countries, and the Kubo valley (Munipoor), re-annexed to it by treaty with the British in 1834; it is enclosed on most sides by mntn. ranges, in elev. from 2,000 to 5,000 ft. above the sea, its central part consisting of the basin of the Irrawadi. Lagoons are numerous in low beds of the S., & in the centre, a little N. of Ava, is a lake 30 m. in length by 10 m. across. The country is reckoned salubrious. From May till the middle of Sept. is the rainy season. From Sept. till March the weather is delightful, the temp. seldom exceeding 75°, in April and May the heat becomes very great, but is soon mitigated by the commencement of rain. Annual fall of rain 150 to 200 inches. The soil is of very high fertility; but except near the towns most of it lies waste, or is only irregularly tilled; and agriculture is generally in the most backward condition. Rice is the chief crop, especially in the S., pulses, Indian millet, & maize are raised in the N., and seshamum is universally cultiv. for cattle. Other products are cotton of short staple, indigo (though this product is so badly managed as to be unfit for export), yams, sweet potatoes, tobacco, capsicums in great quantities, gourds, oil plants, bananas and other fruits, betel nut and leaf, sugar cane, onions, garlic, and in the N. a kind of tea. Teak of a quality inferior to that of both Malabar and Java, oak & other valuable woods, abound on the mntn. ranges, & palm & bamboo are also plentiful. Oxen, buffaloes, and goats are the princip. domestic animals, used for draught, and the elephant is domesticated for the same purpose; a good breed of horses is also reared. Mineral products are numerous and valuable. The gold and silver obtained in the empire, has been estimated to amount in value to upwards of 200,000*l.*, and the produce of petroleum in pits along the Irrawadi to 8 million lbs., annually. Fine marble, serpentine, amber, sapphires and other gems, iron, copper, tin, lead, antimony, sulphur, nitre, and coal are also found. In physical form, the Burmese are more allied to the Mongolians of E. Asia than to the Hindoos. Their figure is short, squat, robust, & fleshy, face lozenge-shaped, cheek bones large, and eyes obliquely placed. The hair is black, coarse and lank, colour of the skin, light brown or yellowish. From the difference of dialects, they may be divided into five tribes or nations. The language is monosyllabic, somewhat allied to the Chinese. They are of a gay disposition, and fond of amusements, but less civilized than the Hindoos or Chinese. They excel in boat-building, and they cast bells, work in gold and silver, and dye silk and other fabrics, weave silk and cotton goods, and manuf. lacquered wares, paper, coarse earthenwares, and some other articles in a respectable manner, but most of their manufd. goods, in ordinary use, are imported from foreign countries. China sends silks to about 81,000*l.* annually, porcelain, copper, carpets, metals, drugs, tea, &c.; in return for raw cotton, feathers, ivory, bird's nests, horns, gums, & some British manufs.; this intercourse being chiefly conducted at a large annual fair at Bhamo. From the Shan tribes, the Burmese obtain their best sword-blades, with lac, wax, varnish in return for salt and dried fish; other articles are mostly imported by sea from British India, and the Asiatic Archipelago, and consist of British cotton goods, areca & cocoa nuts, tobacco, iron, hardwares, copper, lead, & other minerals, opium, sugar, spirits, English glass, earthenwares, fire-arms, and gunpowder, the manufs. of the Burmese in the two last articles, being of the most wretched description. The gov. is hereditary and despotic; the sovereign is assisted by a council of the nobility, over whom he has a kind of feudal jurisdiction, and the titles of the latter are not hereditary. The religion of the mass of the inhabs. is Buddhism; a few Christians and Jews are to be found amongst the pop., & the Khyens & other wild tribes have a special idolatry of their own. Education, in so far as mere reading & writing is concerned, is more diffused than might have been expected. Public rev. is derived from a tithe of the profits of cultiv., duties of 10 per cent. on impts., & 5 per cent. on expts., & on petroleum collected, a royal monopoly of marble, amber, the precious metals, & gems above a certain size, a poll tax on the unsettled tribes, &c.; and the whole fiscal system is "replete with uncertainty, rapacity, and violence." The armed force, in the last war, was all infantry, except a small body of Cassay horse, and a company of artillery, and the war-boats formed the best portion of the armed force. The Burmese empire is divided into 7 provs. Ava and Monchobo have alternately been constituted the capital of the empire. The other principal towns are Amarpure, Sakaing, Rangoon, Bassain, Martaban, Setaung, Taungo, Promé, Patango, Yandabo, and Bhamo. In 1823 the Burmese, by encroaching upon the E. India Co.'s territories, brought on a war with the British, which lasted during the years 1824-5, and terminated in their defeat and the cession of several territories to the English.

Lat. 34° 30' N., lon. 69° 6' E. Pop. about 60,000. It is enclosed on the N.W. and S. sides by hills, along which run some weak ramparts; and at its E. end is the Bala Hissar ("palace of the kings"). This citadel comprises the resid. of the chief, various govern. offices, royal gardens, an inner fort, and a small town with 5,000 inhabs. The outer town, about 3 m. in circ., is entered by 4 gates, and has two princip. thoroughfares running parallel to each other, and the N. of which led to the magnificent bazar, destroyed by the British on their evacuation of Cabool in 1842. The city is subdivided into dists., each enclosed with walls, and capable of being shut off from the rest so as to form a separate fortress; and in the S.W. dist. is a pretty strongly fortified quarter, inhabited by Persians or Kuzzilbashes, of whom there are from 10,000 to 12,000 in the city. Streets intricate, often too narrow for two horsemen to pass each other, and very badly paved. Houses in general 2 or 3 stories high, built of sun-dried bricks and wood, and with flat roofs; those of the wealthy inhabs. have extens. courts and gardens. Outside of the city are the tombs of the emperor Baber, who made Cabool his cap., and of Timour-Shah, the latter being an octagon of brick surmounted by a cupola. Cabool has an active trade; it imports the precious metals, fire-arms, paper, tea, cotton goods, broad cloths, velvets, kermes and other dyes, iron wares, cutlery, needles, raw silk, to from 40,000*l.* to 50,000*l.* yearly, mostly brought from the Russian and the Chinese doms., and Indep. Turkestan; and which goods are mostly expedited S.ward into Hindostan, &c. It has considerable mkts. for corn, cattle, and fuel, and is famous in the E. for its excellent supply of vegetables and fruits. From its elev., the winter in Cabool is long and severe, the summer is delightful; average temp. from 75° to 85°. The inhabs. are tall, well made, not very dark, and have Jewish features. They are Mohammedans of the Sonnee sect. The higher classes speak Persian, the common people the Pushtoo dialect. Cabool was taken by Sebuctaghi in 977, by Tamerlane at the end of the 14th cent., and in 1738 by Nadir Shah. It was the scene in 1842 of the treacherous outbreak of the chiefs, the murders of Sir W. Macnaghten and Sir A. Burnes, and the massacre of 3,800 soldiers and 12,000 camp followers; it was retaken in the same year by the British troops under Sir R. Sale, the bazaars and public buildings burned and finally relinquished. Its chiefship is considered to extend from the S. of Ghuznee to the Hindoo Koosh, & from Bamian to the Khyber mntns., comprising an area of about 10,000 sq. m., with the cities of Cabool, Istalif, Ghuznee, & Jelalabad. CAEN, Cadomum, a city of France, cap. dep. Calvados, 122 m. W.N.W. Paris, and 9 m. from the English Channel, on l. b. of the Orne, which here receives the Odon, and at the head of a branch railw. (in progress) in connex. with the Paris and Rouen railw. Pop. (1846) 38,267. It is a handsome city, & has a university academy, and a chamber of commerce, a college, normal school and school of hydrography, and a rich public library. The chief edifices are the hôtel-de-ville, palace of justice, church of St Etienne, which contains the tombs of William the Conquerer, and his princess Matilda, & the hospital with mineral springs. It has manufs. of lace, blonde, black and white crape, and cutlery; cotton spinning, wax-bleaching, brewing and dyeing works, and ship-building yards. Caen has an extensive maritime commerce, especially with America; its exports consist of manuf. articles, grain, cider, brandy, wine, cattle, fish, and for the London market, fruit, butter, and eggs; its trade is facilitated by a branch of the Odon which traverses it. A maritime canal, 12 ft. deep, is in progress to connect its port with the sea. This was an important place under the Dukes of Normandy, who fortified it; the English took it in 1346, and again in 1417, when they held it till 1450. Previous to the revol. in 1793 it was the seat of a university, founded by Henry VI. of England. It is the birth-place of Malherbe.

CAENBY, a pa. of Engl., co. Lincoln, pts. Lindsey, 7 m. W. Market-Raisen. Ac. 1,760. P. 185.

CAER (Celtic, "a castle.") For names with this prefix not mentioned below, see CAR.

CAER-CARADOC, or CRADOCK-HILL, Engl., co. Salop, is near the confl. of the Clun and Tecond. On it are vestiges of the camp which the celebrated Caractacus defended against the Roman general Ostorius, & whence its name is derived.

CAERGWYLE, a tnsph. of N. Wales, co. Flint, pa. Hope, on the Alyn, 5 m. N.N.W. Wrexham. Pop. 394. Cattle fairs, Shrove Tues., May 16, Aug. 12, Oct 27. It has interesting remains of a castle; and it contributes with Flint, &c., to send 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1846) 73.

CAERHUN, a pa. of N. Wales, co. Carnarvon, on the Conway, 4 m. S. Aberconway. P. 1,257.

CAERLAVEROCK, a pa. of Scotl., co. and 5 m. S.S.E. Dumfries, on the Solway Firth, and the riv. Nith. Estim. area 4,640 ac. P. 1,297. Caerlaverock Castle, the ruined seat of the Maxwells, is in this pa., described in Sir W. Scott's Guy Mannering.

CAERLEON ("castle of the legion,") anc. Isca Silurum, a mkt.-town of Engl., co. Monmouth, pa. Llangattock, on the Usk, here crossed by a modern stone bridge, 2½ m. N.E. Newport. Pop. 1,174. Its houses are mostly old and decaying. It has a good church, several dissenting chapels, a free school, some iron and tin works, a weekly mkt. on Thurs., & 4 ann. fairs; but it is chiefly interesting as the anc. cap. of Britannia Secunda (mod. Wales), & as having been a place of considerable importance, even in the 12th century, during which, however, and subsequently, it was ruined by repeated wars between the Welsh and the Anglo-Normans. Much of the present town stands within the precincts of the anc. camp, the walls of which still partially exist; and a little N.W. ward is a concave area, popularly termed "Arthur's Round Table," but which was evidently a Roman amphitheatre. Various Roman antiquities have been discovered in and around the town; and there is little doubt that it was the cap. of the British chief Arthur, in the 6th century, toward the close of which period, its archbishopric-see was removed to St David's.

CAERMARTHEN, S. Wales. [CARMARTHEN.]

CAERNARVON, a t. of N. Wales. [CARNARVON.]

CAGLI, a walled town of Italy, Pontif. sta., leg. and 13 m. S. Urbino, at the confl. of the Bosso & Cantiano. P. (1836) 9,617. It has an active trade in tanned and dressed leather. Several remains of the anc. Callis have been discov. near it; but the mod. town dates only from the 13th century.

CAGLIARI, Calaris, a fortfd. marit. city, & the cap. of the island Sardinia, on an extensive bay of its S. coast. Lat. (tower of S. Pancrazio) 39° 13' 14" N., lon. 9° 7' 48" E. Pop. (1838) 27,989. The ancient city, on the summit of a low hill, comprises the citadel, viceregal palace, cathedral, & most of the residences of the nobility. The Marina, extending thence down to the shore, is a well-built quarter, containing the dwellings of most of the merchants and foreign consuls, with the bonding warehouses, arsenal, lazaretto, & mole; & the other quarters are Villa-nova and Stampace, and the suburb St Avandrè. Cagliari has about 30 churches, upwards of 20 convents, several hospitals, a female orphan asylum, a public library, college, high school, small theatre, mint, several museums, and prisons for galley slaves. Its harb. is one of the safest in the Mediterranean. Cagliari has a royal tobacco factory, manufs. of cotton fabrics, cake saffron, gunpowder, soap, furniture, leather, &c.; & it exports corn, pulse, oil, wine, and salt. A new and good road connects it with Sassari in the N. part of the isl. It is the seat of a royal court, and a tribunal of commerce, and the residence of the viceroy and the archbp.-primate of Sardinia. It has remains of a Roman amphitheatre, aqueduct, tomb, and some vestiges of the Greek city founded before the Roman dominion.

CAGLIARI (BAY OF), a bay of the Mediterranean, on the S. coast of the isl. Sardinia, between Capes Pula and Carbonara, about 27 m. in breadth at its mouth. It affords secure anchorage. On its shores are Cagbari, and the towns of Pula & St Andrea, with artificial salterns, which yield about 6,000 tons of salt annually.

CAGNANO, 2 TOWNS of Naples.—I. prov. Capitanata, cap. cant., on the Garganian promontory, 25 m. N.E. Foggia. Pop. 4,030.—II. prov. Abruzzo-Ult., 10 m. N.W. Aquila. Pop. 2,180.

CAIRO, El Masr, "the capital" of the Egyptians, El Kahireh, "the victorious" of the Arabs, the capital city of Egypt, residence of the viceroy & seat of government, near the rt. b. of the Nile, and 5 m. from the origin of its Delta. Lat. (tower of the Janissaries), 30° 2' 4" N., lon. 31° 15' 36" E., elev. 40 ft. above the level of the sea. Pop., including the suburbs of Boulac and Old Cairo, estim. at 250,000, comprising about 125,000 Mohammedans, 60,000 Copts, 3,000 to 4,000 Jews, and numerous foreigners. Climate healthy and little variable; the heat is great in summer & even in winter. Mean temp. of the year 72°. 2, of winter 58°. 5, of summer 85°. 1 Fahr. It never snows & very seldom rains, but dew is abundant. The city proper is built on a slope at the foot of one of the lowest ridges of the chain of Jebel Mokkattam, & occupies an area of about 3 sq. m.; it is surrounded by old walls, and the highest part of the ridge is occupied by a citadel, which contains the palace of the viceroy, the arsenal, mint, & publ. offices. The citadel is commanded by forts placed on the extremity of the chain of Mokkattam. The city is separated from its suburbs Boulac and Misr-el-Aatik, improperly called Old Cairo, by a series of gardens and plantations.

Cairo is divided into sev. distinct quarters according to the religion and race of its inhabs., as the Coptic quarter, Jew's quarter, and Frank quarter, which are separated by gates. The streets are narrow, crooked, ill paved, and unfit for the passage of carriages, but they are less filthy than formerly; the houses are substantial, and often lofty; there are many squares surrounded by good private houses, but few modern edifices of importance except the palace of Ibrahim Pacha, with extensive gardens on the Nile, betw. Boulac and Old Cairo, and the handsome residence of the viceroy at Shoubra. The city is traversed by a canal of irrigation, which commences at Old Cairo. The remarkable edifices of Cairo, which comprise many of the finest remains of Arabian architecture, all date from the reign of the Arabs and the anc. sultans of Egypt. Among these are from 300 to 400 mosques, many of which, as those of Sultan Hasan, have lofty & graceful minarets; several of the anc. gates, an aqueduct for conveying water from the Nile to the citadel, the tombs of the Mamelukes, the anc. works of the citadel, and the palace & well of Joseph. At Old Cairo are the seven towers still called "the granary of Joseph," and serving their anc. purpose. In the isl. of Rodah is the celeb. Nilometer, a graduated column for indicating the height of the water during an inundation of the riv.; numerous anc. cisterns and baths still ornament the city; on the S., outside the walls, are the celeb. tombs of the Mamelukes, and on the N.E. the obelisk of Heliopolis. There are four prim. schools in Cairo, each having about 200 pupils, & one preparatory school with 1,500 pupils, a museum of Egyptian antiquities, a magnetic observatory, a European theatre, several hospitals, and a lunatic asylum. Cairo was long the chief entrepôt for the commerce of Egypt, but its trade has much declined; 3 caravans arrive annly. from Mourzouk, Sennaar, & Darfur, & their princip. imports still are slaves. [BOULAC.] [EGYPT.] Cairo was founded by the Arabs about A. D. 970; its citadel was built by Saladin in 1176; it was the cap. of the Sultans of Egypt till the time of the Turkish conq. in 1507, since that time it has been the resid. of the Pachas, governors of the province; it was taken by the French in 1798, and held by them for 3½ years.

CAIRO, Corium, a town of Piedmont, div. Genoa, prov. & 12 m. W.N.W. Savona, cap. mand., on l. b. of the Bormida. Pop. 3,492. Victory of the French over the Austrians in 1794.—II. a vill. of Naples, T. di Lavoro, 15 m. S.E. Sora.

CAISTON, a mkt. town and pa. of England, co. Lincoln, pts. Lindsey, 11 m. S.W. Grimsby. Area of pa. 4,470 ac. Pop. 2,033. Its anc. church stands on the site of Thong-ceaster, a Roman station, said to have been rebuilt by Hengist on as much land as the hide of an ox cut into thongs would cover, and a curious ceremony, doubtless connected with that event, is ann. enacted in its church. It has gram. school founded in 1630, having an ann. rev. of about 300*l.*; a union workho., and 2 branch banks. Mkt. Sat. Fairs, Frid. & Sat. before Palm Sund., May 10, June 1, & Sat. after Old Michaelmas.—II. (anc. Venta Icenorum), a pa., co. Norfolk, near the N. & E. Counties railway, 4 m. S. Norwich. Area 910 ac. Pop. 147. Many Roman urns have been found in this place, the anc. cap. of the Icenii.—III. a pa. same co., 3 m. N. Yarmouth. Area 2,920 ac. Pop. 909.

CAITHNESS, the most northerly co. of Scotland, having W. and N. the co. Sutherland, E. the N. Sea, and N. the Ocean. Area 616 sq. m. or 395,680 ac., of which about 70,000 are cultivated, 75,000 uncultivated, and 250,680 unprofitable. Pop. in 1801, 22,609. Inhabited houses in 1841, 6,965; pop. in do. 36,343. Surface mtnous in the W. and S.; elsewhere flat or undulating, and consisting of extensive moors. Extensive horizontal beds of sandstone cover the level plains, above which is a deep till clay surmounted by a deep fertile loam. Fossil fish and traces of vegetable remains are abundant in the shale & sandstone, and lead ore has been found. Climate damp and chill. Farms mostly small. Agriculture and cattle have greatly improved within the present century. The fishery is the princip. branch of trade; and from 150,000 to 200,000 barrels of fish are annually cured for expt. to the English and Irish mkts. Some kelp and oats are also exported. Impts. are chiefly manuf. goods and colonial produce. Valued reft 37,256*l.* Scots: ann. value of real property (1843) 65,769*l.* Principal towns Wick and Thurso. In the middle ages this part of Scotland belonged for some time to the kings of Norway; most of its inhabs. are of Scandinavian or Gothic descent, and use the English to the exclusion of the Gaelic language. Caithness returns 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 599. It gives the title of Earl to the head of the Sinclair family.

CAJANO (POGGIA), a town of Tuscany in the Val Ombrone, 10 m. W.N.W. Florence. Pop. 1,425. It has a handsome grand-ducal-villa, with an iron suspension bridge over the Ombrone, erected 1833. The celebrated Bianca Capello died here in 1587.

CAJARC, a comm. & town of France, dep. Lot, cap. cant. 19 m. E.N.E. Cahors. Pop. 1,074.

CAJAZZO, an anc. town of Naples, prov. T.-di-Lavoro, 10 m. N.E. Capua. Pop. 3,520. In its vicinity excellent wine is produced.

CAJOS, a branch of the Mahaundy riv., Hindostan, which separates at Cuttack, and terminates principally in the Alankar river.

CALABAR (OLD), or CROSS RIVER, a river of Africa, Upper Guinea, which falls into the bight of Biafra by a wide estuary, in lat. 5° N., lon. 8° 20' E. Captain Becraft, who first explored this riv. in 1841-2, discovered that the so-called Cross River, instead of being a branch of the Calabar, is the main stream. It is navigable by steam-vessels as far as lat. 6° 20' N., lon. 9° 35' E., nearly 200 m. (including windings) from its mth.; the chief towns on its banks are Acoono Coono; Pop. 4,000(?) Omun or Besun, on an isl. of same name; pop. 5,000(?) The branch of this river which joins its estuary from N.N.E., and which has hitherto been considered the main stream, is navigable only for about 30 m. from its estuary. On its l. b., 6 m. from its mouth is Duke Town, and 5 m. N.N.W. of the latter, on a small deltoid branch of the river, is Creek Town; these are the seats of highly interesting missions, and the natives have recently made considerable progress in civilisation. New Calabar River is a branch of the Quorra at its delta, which flows S.E., & enters the bight of Benin W. of Bonny.

CALABOZO, a town of S. Amer., Venezuela, prov. and 130 m. S.S.W. Caracas. Pop. 4,000.

CALABRIA, Bruttium, the S. part of the kgdm. of Naples, bounded E., W., and S. by the Mediterranean, N. by the prov. Basilicata, & separated from Sicily by the Strait of Messina. Area 7,200 sq. m. Pop. (1844) 1,083,632. It forms a long peninsula, and is traversed throughout by the Apennines, which rise to an elev. of 3,000 or 4,000 feet. None of the rivers are large, but the valleys on their banks, & the plains at their mouths, are fertile. Chief products, wine, silk, and oil, wheat, rice, olives, oranges, lemons, and saffron; cotton and the sugar-cane are cultivated. Silk is the staple manuf. The country is divided into the provs. of Calabria-Citra, cap. Cosenza. Pop. 416,727;—Calabria-Ultra I., cap. Reggio. Pop. 298,056;—and Calabria-Ultra II., cap. Catanzaro. Pop. 368,849. This country is often visited by earthquakes. Calabria, in the time of the Romans, was occupied by the Bruttii; its eastern coast formed part of Magna Græcia, and many of its present inhabitants are of Greek descent.

CALACEITE, a town of Spain, prov. and 75 m. N.E. Teruel. Pop. 2,600. Chief industry linen weaving.

CALAF, a town of Spain, prov. and 46 m. N.W. Barcelona. Pop. 2,794. It has manufs. of linens.

CALAHORRA, Calagurris, a city of Spain, prov. and 24 m. S.E. Logroño, on r. b. of the Ebro. Pop. 5,820. It is dull & decayed, with a cathedral, and vestiges of an anc. circus. It is the birth-place of Quintilian.—II. a town in the prov., & 34 m. E. Granada. Pop. 2,050.

CALAIS, a fortified seaport-town of France, cap. cant., dep. Pas-de-Calais, on the Strait of Dover, 26 m. E.S.E. Dover, and 19 m. N.E. Boulogne, at the terminus of a railway from Lille. Lat. of new light-ho., 50° 57' 45" N., lon. 1° 51' 18" E. (height 190 ft.). Pop. (1846) 10,673. The town & harbour are defended by a castle and several forts, and by means of sluices the whole adjacent country may be laid under water. Calais is regularly built and clean; streets wide, well-paved, and mostly furnished with footpaths; houses chiefly of brick. In the great square are the town-hall, and an elegant belfry, 118 ft. in height. The cathedral is a Gothic edifice, containing a fine altar-piece by Vandyck. Other remarkable structures are the Hôtel-Dessin, comprising a good inn, the theatre, & public baths; the Hôtel-de-Guise, formerly a woollen hall; the barracks, public library, & the pier enclosing the harbour. Calais is the seat of a tribunal, & a chamber of commerce, & has manufs. of bobbin-net, hosiery, and tulle (for which numerous steam-mills have lately been erected); salt-refineries, distilleries, carriage-factories, and ship-building docks, and it is an entrepôt for colonial produce, Bordeaux wines, brandy, and cured fish; but its chief importance is owing to its being the French port nearest to England, to which country it exports vast quantities of eggs, and other rural produce. Total value of goods warehoused here in 1842, 60,549l. In the same year 1,214 vessels, aggregate burden 90,485 tons, entered, and 1,222 do., burden 91,915 tons, cleared out of the port, of which latter 911, burden 62,239 tons, were steam-vessels. It has constant steam communication with Dover, Ramsgate, & London. Calais is connected with St Omer by a canal. This city had a prominent place in all the wars between England & France. It was taken by the English, under Edward III., in 1347. The French, under the D. of Guise, retook it in the reign of Mary, 1558.

CALAIS, two townships of U. S., N. Amer.—I. Maine, on the St Croix riv., nearly op. St Andrew's, N. Brunswick. Pop. 2,934. The tide here rises 20 ft., and vessels of the largest class ascend to the lower vill., which is connected by a railway with the upper vill., 2 m. distant. Calais has a considerable timber trade.—II. Vermont, co. Washington, 9 m. N.E. Montpellier. Pop. 1,709.

CALCUTTA, a city of British India, presid. and prov. Bengal, and the cap. of the British dom. in the east, on the l. b. of the Hooghly riv., an arm of the Ganges, & 100 m. from the Bay of Bengal. Lat. of Fort William, 22° 33' 5" N., lon. 88° 17' E. Pop. (1837) estimated at 229,700; besides whom about 177,000 were supposed daily to frequent the city from the suburbs and vicinity. It extends for 6 m. along the river, is enclosed on the land side by a mound & a canal, termed the Mahratta ditch, and is divided into the native quarter or "Black town," on the N.; and the European quarter, or "Chowringhee," on the S. It presents externally a fine appearance, with its numerous spires, temples, villas, and about 30 ghauts or flights of steps, ascending from the water's edge to a long and handsome quay. In Chowringhee are many good houses belonging to Europeans and wealthy native merchants; and here, also, are the esplanade (an Indian Hyde Park), and the large citadel, Fort William, constructed at an expense of 2,000,000*l.*, and usually garrisoned by a European regiment, two native regiments, and a detachment of artillery. The government ho., which cost 40,000*l.*, is a showy palace. The town-hall, custom-ho., mint, St John's cathed., and another English church, the Scotch, Portug., Greek, and Armenian churches, La-Martiniere, Metcalfe hall, the bishop's college, courts of justice, barracks, jail, hospitals, and some small but handsome mosques, are the chief edifices in this quarter. The native town is a filthy place, with narrow streets, an abundance of pagodas, and num. pools; in its principal square is a large tank 60 ft. in depth. Calcutta is the seat of the superior civil and criminal courts for the Bengal presid.; of Hindoo, Mohammedan, Sanscrit, and Anglo-Indian colleges; grammar, free and various other schools; military & orphan asylums, the Asiatic Society of Bengal, a lyceum, public library, medical, agricultural, commercial, bible, missionary, & other associations, & many private seminaries. The Hooghly, here about 1 m. across at high water, is usually crowded with shipping; and Calcutta is, next to Canton, the greatest emporium of the East. Principal exports consist of indigo, rice, opium, sugar, raw and manuf. silks and cottons, nitre, hides, gunny bags, rum, borax, castor oil, lac, seeds, &c.; and in 1842-3, the whole amounted in value to 7,275,685*l.*; the exports to Great Britain being valued at 3,765,831*l.*; and those to China at 1,292,149*l.*, of which latter amount opium stood for 1,729,174*l.* The remaining produce is exported chiefly to France and the French colonies, the U. States, the other Indian presids., Singapore, Arabia, Persia, and the Mauritius; those to France amounting to 516,580*l.* In 1844-5, the exports to France amounted in value to 752,660*l.*, having nearly doubled within the previous 10 years; and in the same year the exports of indigo reached 1,539,117 manuds. Imports consisting of British cotton cloths and twist, copper and other metals, woollens, hardwares and cutlery, wines and spirits, coffee, spices, coal, coral, glass, plate, jewellery, European articles of luxury in general, &c., amounted to 4,123,213*l.*, of which the reg. value of those from Gt. Britain amounted to 2,925,663*l.* In 1843, 179 ships, aggregate burden 48,668 tons, belonged to the port. Calcutta is the seat of the chief bishop of the Church of England in India, and of a vicar-apostolic of the Romish Church, of the supreme courts of justice, and one of the courts of justice and appeal for the presidency of Bengal, & the head-quarters of the government and governor-general. The great bulk of the pop. consists of native Hindoos and Mohammedans, of about 3,000 English and 5,000 half-castes, about 3,000 Portuguese, & the remainder French, Armenians, Jews, Persians, Chinese. The total number of houses and huts in the vicinity, exclusive of the suburbs, was in 1837, 65,495. The lower part of the town being hollow, damp, and dirty, with much stagnaunt water, is very unhealthy. In the hot season, from middle of March to middle of June, the thermometer ranges from 83° to 89° Fahr. The mean temp. of the year is 82° .4, of winter 72° .2, and of summer 86° .7 Fahr.

European society in Calcutta exhibits much pomp and gaiety, with an over-abundance of formality & stiffness. Equipages are abundant, the public evening drive being esteemed an indispensable luxury. The rich native families, who now assimilate in the splendour of their houses and equipages to the English, are of very recent origin, & owe their wealth & consequence to the commercial facilities which the city affords.

In 1698, the seat of the East India Company's factory was removed from Hooghly to Calcutta, previously to which Calcutta was an inconsiderable village surrounded with jungle. In 1756, an attack was made on the English factory by the natives, and 146 Englishmen were shut up in the black hole, of whom 118 died before morning. In 1757 the fort was retaken, and has ever since remained in possession of the English.

Lat.  $11^{\circ} 15' N.$ , lon.  $75^{\circ} 52' E.$  Pop. has been estim. at 25,000, but it is declining. Though it has only an open roadstead, it was for nearly 2 centuries the emporium of a flourishing trade, and it still exports teak, pepper, cardamoms, wax, coir, cordage, sandalwood, and cocoa-nuts. It was the first place in India touched at by Vasco de Gama, who arrived here May 18, 1498.

CALIFORNIA, an extensive country in the W. part of N. Amer., bordering the Pacific Ocean, and extending from Cape St Lucas, on the S. (lat.  $22^{\circ} 48' W.$ ), to boundary line, lat.  $42^{\circ} N.$ , & from lon.  $109^{\circ} W.$ , near the sources of the Colorado riv., to lon.  $124^{\circ} W.$ , on the Pacific. It has been divided into Upper and Lower California, the upper division including all that portion N. of lat.  $32^{\circ}$ , and the lower comprehending the narrow penins. formed by the Gulf of California, which separates it from the mainland of N. Amer. on the E., & the Pacif. O., which bounds it on the W.

Lower California.—This peninsula extends in length to 700 m., and in breadth varies from 80 to 100 m. The pop. may probably amount to 15,000. A mtn. chain traverses its centre, in some points rising to an elev. of 5,000 ft. The intervening valleys are narrow, sandy, and sterile, which is the general character of the country, with the exception of some alluvial valleys and irrigated spots, which are extremely fertile. The climate is hot, arid, and subject to frequent hurricanes. There are only two or three small streams in the whole district, and so barren is the rocky surface that trees of any magnitude are rarely to be found. The country was discovered by Cortez in 1534, and in 1697 was first colonized by a party of Spanish Jesuits. The towns and villages of Loreto, La Paz, and St Jose were founded by them, and some progress was made in the civilization of the natives; but these still remain in a very rude state, their indolent and apathetic characters precluding improvement or advancement in religious knowledge. The country contains gold, silver, and lead, but hitherto not much wrought. The N. part of N. California consists of primary schistose strata, traversed by porphyritic and volcanic rocks of more recent formation, towards the S. the secondary strata succeed. Salt lakes abound in the eastern district. The S. coast is famous for its pearl fishery; in the beginning of the 17th century, from 600 to 800 Indian divers were employed in this fishery, and pearls to the amount of 60,000 dolls. were annually procured; at present this occupation has greatly fallen off. Cattle are reared in considerable numbers. In the neighbourhood of the Roman Catholic missions, maize, dates, figs, and other fruits are raised, and grapes, from which a small quantity of wine is made. Principal exports are pearls, tortoise-shell, dried beef, a few hides, dried fruits, cheese, and soap, which are mostly sent in coasting vessels to San Blas and Mazatlan, in exchange for provisions, clothing, and other necessaries.

Upper or New California is a much more extensive and important country; a portion of it only, which extends along the Pacific, has, however, been explored and colonized. This portion comprises all the country W. of a range called the Sierra Nevada or Californian mountains, which extend from N.W. to S.E., in a line nearly parallel to the coast outline. This district is about 600 m. long, and the breadth from the sea to the mtn. range about 120 m., affording an area of 72,000 sq. m. A lower range of hills bounds the coast. The river Sacramento, flowing from the N. with its tributaries, Americanos, Los Plumas, Bear riv., &c., and the riv. San Joachim from the S., both traverse this tract of country, & meeting about its centre, discharge their waters into the Bay of San Francisco, one of the largest & most commodious inland bays or harbours in the world. The valleys of these rivers & their affs., form the richest & most fertile parts of the country, the diversified surface being adapted both for agricultural & grazing purposes. Near the source of the San Joachim is L. Chintache, and still further S., the Tule lakes. Sev. smaller streams and rivs. intersect the country in this direction. The summits of the Californian mtns. attain an elev. of from 5,000 to 10,000 ft. E. of these is a vast desert plain composed chiefly of arid sand, with mtns. occasionally rising to the line of perpetual snow. Through the eastern part of this country flows the large riv. Colorado, taking its rise in a range of mtns. of the same name, and flowing in a S.W. direction till it enters the Gulf of California. The climate on the coast of the Pacific is very moist, and subject to frequent gales and hurricanes; but a little further inland it becomes very serene, mild, and healthy, and highly favourable to the process of vegetation. From November to April is the rainy season, but snow rarely falls except on the mountain tops. The summer is hot, with little or no rain, but copious dews. The temperature is greatly milder and less variable on the W. shores of the Pacific, than in corresponding latitudes on the Atlantic. Coal has been found in two or three localities, apparently connected with the oolite strata; at Green riv., lat.  $41^{\circ} 30' N.$ , lon.  $110^{\circ}$  to  $111^{\circ} E.$ , & in the adjacent hills, & near San Luis Obispo, lat.  $35^{\circ} 20' N.$  Besides gold—copper, quicksilver, and lead ores—are known to exist in various localities. On the coast are the bays of San Francisco, Bodega, Monterey, and San Pedro, and capes Mendocino and Reyes. The harbour of San Francisco is spacious, with safe anchorage for any number of vessels. All the fruits of Europe, from the apple to the orange, grow luxuriantly, and the vine of Europe thrives here to such a degree, that New California may hereafter become an important wine-growing country; large quantities of brandy are also made from a native grape. Oak, elm, ash, plane, and pine timber is plentiful. Wheat, olives, flax, hemp, potatoes, and kitchen herbs thrive well, though the long dry summer requires the practice of irrigation. The tula, a sort of edible bulrush, grows plentifully on the banks of the rivers and lakes. Live stock are the staple product; & in 1831, the stock was estimated to comprise 216,000 cattle, 155,000 sheep, besides horses & wild herds. Deer and game are abundant; the bear, otter, and beaver, are still found. Exports hides, tallow, & cattle, with some wheat, wine, raisins, olives, and brandy. Imports comprise most manufactured goods, with deals, salt, silks, candles, &c. In 1835, there were 21 missions or villages, each subordinate to a Franciscan friar as prefect, and inhabited altogether by about 18,688 nominally christian Indians; and some small settlements inhabited by retired soldiers, retaining their own independent jurisdiction, who, together with the garrison, amounted to 4,342, making a total population of 23,025.

In 1848, on the farm of Captain Sutor, New Helvetia, on the banks of the Sacramento, the discovery of the existence of gold, to a great extent, was made, which promises to effect a complete change in the aspect of this country. Gold, in the form of grains, scales, and masses, has been found to prevail abundantly in the soil and shingley beds of the Sacramento, and in its tributaries, including an area of several hundred square miles. [SAN FRANCISCO.—SACRAMENTO.]

In 1836, the Californians threw off the yoke of Mexico. In 1846, the country was taken possession of by the forces of the United States, which possession was confirmed at the termination of the Mexican war in 1848. In 1849 a constitution was formed; and, in 1850, California was admitted a Federal State of the North American Union. Principal edifices, also connected with the university, are the senate-house, an elegant Grecian structure, finished 1766; the public schools, library, observatory, Pitt press or university printing-office, & Fitzwilliam museum. Total number of mems. on the boards (1847) 6,638. Each college or hall is internally governed by its own statutes; but the government of the colleges, as a confederation, rests with a senate composed of two houses, and the members of which, having the degree of Dr or M.A., amount to nearly 2,800. The executive government is vested in the chancellor (at present H. R. H. Pr. Albert), the vice-chancellor, high steward, commissary, proctors, and other officers; and two courts, of which the vice-chancellor and the commissary are the head, determine most of the legal cases occurring within the university precincts. As in Oxford, candidates for university honours rely more on the teaching of private tutors for instruction than on that of the professors. Mathematics (though not to the exclusion of classical and other learning) form an important branch of study at Cambridge. Newton, Bacon, and many of the greatest divines and poets of Britain, conferred lustre on this school. The prizes open to the university at large amount annually to 1,200l., and at the different colleges to not less than 300l. The general income of the university is said not to exceed 5,600l. a year. The total rev. of colleges and halls, &c., was, in 1835, estimat. at 133,268l. annually. The university sends 2 mems. to the H. of C., who are chosen by the senate. Reg. electors (1849) 2,780.

CANADA, the most extensive and valuable of the British colonial possessions in N. Amer., extending between lat. 42° and 53° N., and lon. 64° and 90° W., having N. the Hudson Bay territory, W. lakes Superior and Huron, S. lakes Erie and Ontario, E. the riv. St Lawrence, and the U. S., New York, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine. Length from lake Superior to Anticosti island, about 1,000 m.; average breadth 300 m. Estimated area and pop. as follow:—

Provinces.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. (1845).	Chief Cities.
Upper Canada,	141,000	875,000	Toronto.
Lower Canada,	205,860	655,000	Quebec.
Total,	346,860	1,270,000	-

Upper Canada is wholly on the N. side of the great lakes Erie and Ontario, and the river St Lawrence; but Lower Canada comprises a considerable area S. of that riv., the great tributary of which—the Ottawa—separates the two provs. Other principal rivs. are the Thames, Ouse, St Clair, Welland, Rideau, St Maurice, Richlieu, Saguenay, tributaries to the St Lawrence, and the St John, which forms a part of the boundary on the side of Maine. Surface extremely variable. It rises in the N.W. into a table land, supposed to be from 1,200 to 1,900 ft. above the sea. The uncleared tracts are mostly a wilderness of forests, marshes, and lakes. The soil throughout a large part of Lower Canada is sterile, hut it improves on proceeding W. ward; and the peninsula of Upper Canada, between lakes Ontario and Erie on the S., and St Clair and Huron on the W. and N., is one of the most productive regions in its lat. Climate variable; mean temp. at Toronto, year, 44° .4; winter, 26° .4; summer, 63° .2. At Quebec, year, 41° .8; winter, 14° .2; summer, 68° Fahr.; for 4 or 5 months annually the surface is covered with snow. The mean heat in July varies from 60° to 70°. The prevailing winds are from S.W. N.E., and N.W. Fogs are almost unknown. Thunder storms are frequent, & cause considerable damage; on the lakes water-spouts are sometimes formed, and the aurora-horealis is frequent and very brilliant. A few years ago 2,066,000 acres in all, were estimated to be under culture in Lower Canada, and 1,308,000 do. in Upper Canada, besides which 9,376,000 acres in the two provs. were occupied, though uncultivated. The grains and fruits of N. Europe, tobacco, flax, and hemp, are the principal crops. Timber trees consist of pines, firs, oaks, Amer. ash, hickory, and maple, from which last a good deal of sugar is obtained. Ginseng is indigenous, and the Zizania aquatica, a grain somewhat similar to rice, is peculiar to Canada. Wild animals, as bears, deer, wolves, boars, beavers, and otters, are numerous, and furs form an important product. The humming-bird appears in Canada, and the rattle-snake is not uncommon. Fish are abundant in the lakes, cod in the bays, & salmon and herring in great plenty. Principal mineral products, iron, with some argentiferous lead, coal, copper, salt, and sulphur. Principal exports, corn, meal, and flour; oak, pine, and elm timber, with masts, deals, &c.; furs, fish, and potash. The imports comprise coals, metals, cordage, and most kinds of manufd. goods from Great Britain, colonial produce from the W. Indies, and provisions and tobacco from the U. States. In 1840, the imports into Lower Canada amounted in value to 1,908,043*l.*; & exports, to 1,625,685*l.*, of which timber stood for 952,826*l.* Total value of imports by sea into Canada in 1844, 2,493,453*l.*; those from Great Britain amounting to 2,134,038*l.* Value of exports in same year, 1,809,844*l.*; those of the U. Kingdom amounted to 1,746,488*l.* In 1846, 326 vessels built in Canada were registered at British ports; aggregate burden, 154,930 tons. Reg. shipping of colony (1844) 569 ships; aggregate burden, 55,458 tons. Upper Canada is subdivided into 11 dists., and between 200 and 300 tnsips., and is inhab. chiefly by the descendants of colonists from the U. Kingdom. On the shores of Lakes Huron & Superior some native Indian tribes are settled, amounting in all to perhaps 10,000 persons. Principal cities and towns, Quebec, Montreal, and Three Rivers, in L. Canada; Toronto and Kingston in U. Canada. Total public revenue (1842) 465,141*l.*; expenditure, 476,304*l.* Canada, first discovered in 1499 by J. & S. Cabot, was acquired by the British between 1759 and 1763. In 1774, by an act of the British Parliament, a legislative council of 23 members was appointed to assist the governor; in 1791, 2 legislative chambers were constituted; and in 1839, after several years of much discontent in the colonies, and at last an open rebellion in 1837-8, a bill passed to re-unite the two provinces under the administration of a governor-general, a legislative council of not less than 22 elected by the crown, and a legislative assembly of 42 mems. from each prov. elected by the people. Lower Canada is subdivided into the 4 dists. of Quebec, Montreal, Three Rivers, and Gaspé, each of which has its judges, sheriffs, &c. The dists. are subdivided into 40 counties, and upwards of 200 seignories & fiefs, & 160 tnsips. The seignories are old French divisions, and mostly inhabited by a pop. of French descent. A number of canals for internal communication have been constructed, the principal of which are the Welland, the Rideau, the Lochine, and a railway has been opened from Niagara to Detroit.

In 1793 Canada was made an English bishopric; there are now bps. of Quebec, Montreal, & Toronto, besides Roman Catholic bishops, and Protestant dissenting ministers of all denominations. There are government and private schools, and higher educational seminaries. In 1842 there were treasury & colonial grants for religious purposes, to the amount of 18,400*l.*; educational grants, 63,200*l.* The total amount of emigrants who arrived at Quebec from 1832 to 1844, amounted to 313,837, being an average of 24,041 a year, besides those who may have entered Canada through the United States.

CANADA CREEK, a riv., U. S., New York, joins the Mohawk river after a course of 60 miles.—Canadian River, Upper Texas, N. Amer., joins the Arkansas river, state Arkansas, near lat. 37° N., lon. 106° W., after a generally E. ward course, estimated at 800 miles.

CANAJOHARIE, a tnsip. of U. S., N. Amer., New York, on the Mohawk river and the Erie canal, 47 m. W.N.W. Albany. Pop. 5,146.

CANALE, a town of the Sard. sta., Piedmont, prov. Alba, cap. mand., 24 m. S.E. Turin. Pop. (1838) with comm. 3,905. It has important saline springs, and two weekly markets.

CANANDAIGUA, a tnsip. of U. S., N. America, New York, cap. co. Ontario, at the N. extremity of Canandaigua lake, 14 m. W. Geneva. Pop. 5,602; of vill. 2,790. The vill., neatly built, has several churches, a court-house, jail, town-hall, and some superior schools. Canandaigua Lake, 15 m. in length S. to N., & from 1 to 1½ m. wide, discharges its surplus water N. ward into Seneca river. Its shores are fertile and highly cultivated. Its waters are clear and abound in fish.

CANANEA, a maritime town of Brazil, prov. S. Paulo, on a small isl. in the bay of Tarapandé. Lat. 25° S. Pop. 2,000, suburbs included.

CANANORE, Canura, a seaport town of British India, presid. Madras, dist. Malabar, at the head of a small bay, 53 m. N.N.W. Calicut. It has, with its suburbs, about 11,000 houses, and is the cap. of a territory long governed by female sovereigns, and comprising most of the Laccadive islands. It has an active trade with Bengal, Arabia, Sumatra, &c.; imports horses, piece goods, almonds, sugar, opium, silk, benzoin, and camphor; exports pepper, cardamoms, sandalwood, coir, and shark fins.

CANARA, the most W. district of the Madras presid., British India, extending along the Malabar coast, between lat. 12° and 15° N., and lon. 74° and 75° E., having landward the British dists. Malabar, Coorg, and Dharwar, with Mysore, and the Portuguese territory of Goa. Area 7,477 sq. m. Pop. (1837) 759,776. Surface uneven, and the Ghauts form its E. boundary. Rice is exported hence in large quantities to Arabia, Goa, and Bombay. Forests of teak and other timber trees are extensive. Public rev. (1836-7) 275,846*l.*, of which the land rev. stood for 167,121*l.* Principal towns, Mangalore and Barcelore. In S. Canara (as in Malabar) all inheritance descends in the female line, and instead of a man's own children, those of his sister or aunt are his heirs. It is estim. that 50,000 of the pop. are R. Catholics. The prov. was transferred to Britain in 1799.

CANARIES, or CANARY ISLANDS, Fortunate Insulæ, an archipelago, Atlantic oc., about 60 m. from the W. coast of N. Africa, between lat. 27° 40', & 29° 25' N., and lon. 13° 25', and 18° 16' W. They consist of 7 principal islands and several islets, arranged in the following order from E. to W.:—Lanzarote and Fuerteventura, with the islets Graciosa, Sta. Clara, Alegranza, & Lobos; Gran Canaria, Tenerife, Gomera, Palma, and Hierro (Ferro). Area of the whole estimated at 4,000 sq. m. Pop. (1844) estimated at 202,900. The coasts of these islands are rocky and abrupt, and they are covered with mountains, some of which attain a great elevation, the Pico de Teyde in Tenerife being 12,182 ft. Their geological formation is most singular and interesting; it consists of a continuous series of volcanic mountains, which rise in a circular form from the coast around a principal crater, which serves as axis; the greater part of them are deeply indented, & in the form of a cone reversed. The surf. is volcanic, presenting a succession of mntns. & plains, extinct craters and fertile valleys. There are no rivers, but numerous torrents. The tropical heat is moderated by the Atlantic breezes, and the climate is equable. Winter is almost unknown on the coasts. In Oct., the warmest month, the temp. varies from 78° to 87° Fahr.; and in Jan., the coldest, it is from 60° to 66° Fahr. near the sea; decreasing with the elevation. The rainy season commences in Nov. and continues till Feb.; during the dry season, from April to Oct., the weather is uniformly fine, and the trade winds blow steadily. E. and S.E. winds are the scourge of these islands; blowing over the burning plains of Africa, they carry an intensely hot and dry air, which destroys vegetation & induces disease. In 1704 the Canaries suffered severely from this cause. Fresh water is so scarce, especially in the S. parts of the islands, as in some seasons to induce many of the inhabitants to emigrate. The vegetation of these islands is not less interesting than their geological formation (see Johnston's Physical Atlas). The chief productions are wine, oil, grain, the sugar-cane, and exquisite fruits of all kinds; and the surrounding seas abound in fish. The principal foreign trade is carried on with the U. S. of N. Amer., Engl., & Hamburg, & there is considerable commerce between the different islands. The ann. produce is estimated at 170 qrs. of grain, 54,000 pipes of wine, 300,000 quintals barilla, and 500,000 barrels of potatoes. The goat is among the most valuable animals; dogs are numerous, and all the domestic animals of Europe are easily naturalized. The camel and the ass are used as beasts of burden. Among birds are the vulture, bustard, pheasant, wood pigeon, red partridge, blackbird, linnet, and the thistle finch or canary bird. The inhabitants are of European origin, mostly Spaniards. Since 1493 these islands have belonged to Spain, of which kingdom they form a prov., governed by the same laws as the peninsular portion; the cap. of the whole archipelago is Santa Cruz de Tenerife.

CANARY ISLAND, (Spanish Gran Canaria), an island near the centre of the group of the Canaries, of a circular form. Area 758 sq. m. Pop. 57,625. Length S.W. to N.E. 35 m.; at the N.E. point a portion detached from the mass is joined by a peninsula. Surface mountainous; culminating point El Cumbre, 6,648 ft. in elev. The cap. is las Palmas, the largest and best built town of the archip. Pop. 17,382. It has a fine cathedral and a palace of justice. The other principal places are Port la Luz, which is well sheltered and has a good anchorage. Teror, a town of 4,600 inhabs., residence of the bishop and a place of pilgrimage. Tirazana, a colony of free blacks, who live in grottos and have no intercourse with Europeans. Atalaya, a town of 2,000 inhabitants, the houses of which are excavated in the sides of Mount St Antoine. Aguimez, pop. 2,300; and Telde, a town situated in a fertile dist. on the coast.

CANDAHAR, or KANDAHAR (Afgh. Ahmed-Shahi), a fortified city and the cap. of Central Afghanistan, in a fertile plain, 3,484 ft. above the sea, 200 m. S.W. Cabool. Lat. 32° 37' N.; lon. 66° 20' E. Pop. variously stated from 25,000, to 100,000, mostly Afghans, but including many Persians, Uzbeks, Beloochees, Jews, & Hindoos, which last almost monopolize the commerce. It is enclosed by bastioned mud walls, 3½ m. in circumference, and by a ditch; and it has a citadel on its N. side. Two principal streets, about 50 yards broad, and lined with shops, traverse the interior in opposite directions, intersecting at its centre where is a kind of circus, and a domed mkt.-place. Houses mostly ill built of wood, and with domed or flat roofs; thoroughfares filthy, though the place is well supplied with water from canals and wells. The mosques are mean, and almost the only public building worthy of notice is the tomb of Ahmed Shah (the founder of the mod. town),—an octagonal edifice, 40 feet in diam. by 70 ft. in ht., & mounted on a platform. Various manufs. are carried on in Candahar; & its transit trade is consid'ble. Its vicinity is well watered by canals from the Urghundaub riv., 4 m. W. ward, and produces the finest fruits, with corn, tobacco, madder, &c. In 1839, the government rev. from it & the city was estim. at 80,000*l.* a year. Candahar is supposed to have been originally founded by Alexander the Great. It was taken by Tamerlane in 1384, and by Shah Abbas of Persia in 1620, and was held by British troops from 1839 to 1842, when it was finally evacuated.

CANDE, a comm. & town of France, dep. Maine-et-Loire, arrond. and 11 m. S.W. Segre, on the Endre. Pop. 1,115.

CANTAL, a central dep. of France, formed of the S. part of the old prov. Auvergne, cap. Aurillac. Area 2,200 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 260,497. It is entirely mntnous., occupied by the mass of Cantal and its contreforts, culminating point, Plomb de Cantal, one of the 4 principal groups which form the mtns. of Auvergne, 6,093 ft. in elev. The surface is almost entirely covered with the debris of extinct volcanoes; it furnishes marble and coal, and has numerous mineral springs; its metallic riches are unexplored. Chf. rivers, the Alagnon, affl. of the Allier; Truyère & Celle, affs. of the Lot; the Cère, affl. of the Dordogne. The climate is salubrious; rigorous in the mtns., the summits of which are covered with snow more than half the year. Soil infertile, except in some of the valleys; the declivities of the mtns. afford excellent pasturage. Corn is insufficient for consumption, and the chief products are buck-wheat, potatoes, and chesnuts. The rearing of cattle is one of the chief branches of industry; the chief manuf. being cheese (the most celebrated of which is called Roquefort), linens, and paper. Many of the inhabs. of these mtns. emigrate every winter; they are justly esteemed for their fidelity. The dep. forms the 19th military division of France, and is divided into the arronds. Aurillac, Mauriac, Murat, and St Flour, its principal towns.

CANTERBURY, a city, bor., and county of itself, Engl., and its metropolitan see, within co. Kent, on the Stour, 53 m. E.S.E. London, with which it communicates by railw. Lat 51° 16' 48" N., lon. 1° 4' 31" E. Area, which includes 14 pas., 3,240 ac. Inhab. houses 2,769. Pop. in 1801, 9,000; in 1841, 15,435. The parliamentary & municipal boundaries include the whole of the city and suburbs, with exception of a few houses in Thanington pa., Ashford Road. It is situated in a rich vale watered by the Stour, and has 4 main streets, branching from a centre at right angles, and each terminating in a suburb beyond the anc. walls, considerable remains of which still exist. Its cathed., erected in 12th and two following centuries, on the site of the first christian church built in Saxon Engl., is in the form of a double cross, with a central and 2 W. towers, and presents a magnificent union of almost every style of Christian architecture. The choir is the largest and one of the finest in the kingdom, and the pavement of the chapel of the Holy Trinity is worn into hollows by the knees of the innumerable pilgrims who here worshipped at the shrine of Thomas à Becket. Amongst other interesting tombs here, is that of the Black Prince. A fine chapter-ho., & a valuable library are attached to the cathed., under which is a spacious crypt, used as a French Protestant church since the reign of Elizabeth. The num. pa. churches are mostly anc., but possess little interest. The gramm. school, founded by Henry VIII. for 50 scholars, has sev. exhibitions & scholarships at Cambridge. There are numerous other endowed schools; an hospital for poor brethren, founded by Archbp. Lanfranc, present annual rev. 411.; Jesus hospital, founded in 1595, rev. 584.; another hospital, with a rev. of 306l.; an infirmary, an anc. guild-hall, a session-ho., gaol, and ho. of correction, work-ho. and exchange, large barracks, a theatre, ball-room, and philos. institution, with a library and museum. A fine ancient gateway, and some remains of St. Augustine's abbey, and of a Norman castle, the old Chequers' Inn, immortalized by Chaucer, and the Donjon or Danegohn field (now formed, with its mound of supposed Danish origin, into a beautiful planted walk), may be specified as objects of interest. In the immediate vicinity are several woollen mills, but the chief business is the export of agricultural produce, especially of the hops extensively grown in the neighbourhood, and of brawn, for which the city has some repute. Chief mkts., Wed. (for hops) and Sat. Fairs for 10 or 12 days, begin Oct. 10. Pettyssions, Thursdays. Quarter-sessions for capital offences are also held. Corp. revenue (1843) 3,804*l*. Canterbury sends 2 m. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,924. Canterbury was, previous to the Roman invasion, a place of note as a religious institution. It was made a princip. station by the Romans, & in the 2d century christianity was introduced. It subsequently became the cap. of the Saxon kingdom of Kent, under the name of Caer-Cant, hence Cantuarua & Canterbury. The archb'ric, founded A. D. 597, has had 93 archb'ps, includg. the present primats, the most famous of whom have been St Augustine, the founder of the see, St Dunstan, Stigand, Lanfranc, Anselm, Becket, Cardinal Pole, Cranmer, Land, and Tillotson. The archb'p of Canterbury is "primate of all Engl.," and the first peer of the realm, next to the royal family. He crowns the sovereign in Westminster Abbey, and amongst other privileges has that of conferring degrees in divinity, law, and physic. His province comprises 20 suffragan b'prics, & his diocese 258 pas., besides 100 pas. called "peculiar" in other sees. Net rev. of archb'prie (1843) 20,969*l*. Rev. of the chapter, which consists of a dean, 12 prebs., 6 preachers, 6 minor canons, &c. (1831) 15,982*l*.

CANTON, (Chinese Sang-Ching, the "provincial city"), a city & seaport of China, & the greatest commercial emporium of Asia, cap. prov. Quang-tong, on l. b. of the Canton or Pearl (Choo-heang) riv., about 70 m. from its mouth, in the China Sea. Lat. 23° 8' 9" N., lon. 113° 15' E. M. T. of year 69°.9; winter 54°.8; summer 82° Fahr. Pop. has been estim. at upwards of 1,000,000, but this is probably far too high a calculation. With its suburbs it occupies the N. bank of the river, extending inland nearly to a row of heights commanding it on the N. & N. E., but between which and the city is a broken ravine; to the S. is an alluvial plain, formed by the delta of the river. The city is enclosed by a wall of brick, on a foundation of red sandstone, 6 or 7 m. in circ., & entered by 12 gates; and it is unequally divided by another wall with 4 gates, into the old and new town, in the former of which are the residences of most of the high officers, the public arsenal, &c. The walls are in some places mounted with cannon. On the N. heights are 4 strong forts, & on some isls. in the riv. are other forts, termed the "Dutch," and the "French folly." Various detached batteries also guard the approach to the city by the riv. The suburbs are nearly as large as the city itself; on the S. they stretch all along the river side; and at their S. W. corner are the hongs or European quarter—a range of buildings about 1½ furlong in length, built upon a flat raised on piles, and separated from the riv. by a quay 100 yards in breadth, called Respondentia Walk. There are 13 hongs, including those of the British, Dutch, American, French, Austrian,

Swedish, Danish, Parsee, and other merchants, & which merely consist of 4 or 5 brick or stone houses, ranged around a closed court: 2 of them are partly occupied by good European hotels. The English hong far surpasses the rest in elegance and extent. Near the quay is another small space, about 50 or 60 yards sq., walled in and laid out as a garden; and the above narrow limits comprise all the territory assigned to foreigners. Contiguous to the hongs are Old and New China Streets, and Hog Lane; the 2 former are among the best streets in the suburbs; the last is a filthy narrow lane, well-known to foreign seamen, and where many disturbances between them and the Chinese have arisen. The city and the suburbs are laid out & built after one fashion. Streets narrow and crooked, varying from 2 to 16 ft., but averaging 7 or 8 ft. in width, paved and flagged, each closed by gates guarded at night, and each of the trading thoroughfares appropriated to one trade. Several canals intersect the city, and are crossed by stone bridges. Houses mostly of brick, but also of stone, mud, & wood, seldom more than one storey in height, with flat roofs and terraces, floored with hardened mud, stone or tiles, and the place of window-glass commonly supplied by paper, mica, or thin shell. The residences of the wealthy inhabs. are built within a walled court, and are richly furnished; those of the middle classes, in which about one-third of the pop. resides, have no courts; and those of the lower orders, which are numerous, along the banks of the canals & in the suburbs, are wretched mud hovels, in which from 10 to 20 persons are sometimes crowded in one apartment. A large part of the pop. resides on the water; and for 4 or 5 miles opposite the city, & both above and below, the river is crowded with vessels and rafts of all kinds, on many of which large numbers of poultry are reared. Upwards of 120 temples are enumerated in & adjacent to Canton, the principal being the remarkable Buddhist-temple of Ho-nan on an adjacent large island. [HO-NAN.] Within the old city are two other considerable temples, and a Mohammedan mosque, with a dome and minaret 160 ft. in height; & outside of the walls, on the N. side, is a lofty pagoda. Canton has several hospitals, a grand hall for examination of candidates for literary honours, 14 high schools, and about 30 colleges, 3 of which have each 200 students. Manufs. various and extensive, & the shops are filled with articles of Chinese workmanship. 17,000 persons are said to be employed in silk-weaving, 50,000 in the manuf. of all kinds of cloth, & upwards of 4,000 in shoemaking. Great numbers of individuals work in wood, stone, iron and brass, and the book trade is considerable. The markets abound with all kinds of live stock for food, including dogs, cats, owls, &c., suitable only for Chinese consumers; but provisions of all kinds are abundant and tolerably cheap. Canton is well supplied with water from reservoirs and springs. Burglaries are rare; but loss by fire is frequent, and, in 1822, above 10,000 houses were burnt, besides the E. India Company's factory, with property to the amount of 500,000*l*. The city is also subject to inundations.

Until 1843, all the legitimate foreign trade of China was conducted at Canton; and its amount before the breaking out of the late war, was estim. (inclusive of the trade by junks with adjacent countries) at 80,000,000 dolls. annually. Tea is the great article of export to Europe, &c.; next to which come silk and silk piece goods, the precious metals, cassia, sugar, porcelain, & many other inferior articles. In 1844, the total exports to Europe & America, amounted in value to 5,528,022*l.*; and the imports, comprising woollen and cotton goods, raw cotton, cotton yarn, ginseng, wrought iron, tin, lead, rattans, wood, spices, skins, ivory, at 3,866,037*l.* The exports to Great Britain and the British possessions in the East, amounted to 3,883,828*l.* (of which upwards of seven-eighths were shipped direct to ports of the U. Kingdom), and this amount comprised tea to 2,910,500*l.* The imports into Canton in British shipping, amounted in value to 3,451,312*l.*, of which British manufs. & articles of staple produce, stood for 2,703,146*l.*; & the importation of British woollens, & especially of cottons, having far exceeded the maximum of former periods. The importation of opium into Canton and other ports, is tacitly permitted, though not legalised. [CHINA.] The imports at Canton in American vessels in the same year, amounted to 529,900*l.*; and the exports in do. to 1,448,670*l.*; & the trade of other nations was of much less consequence. In all, 306 European & American ships, of an aggregate burden of 142,099 tons (of which 228 vessels, burden 111,350 tons were British), entered; and 296 do., aggregate burden 140,182 tons (of which 228 do., burden 112,142 tons, were British), cleared out of the port of Canton in 1844. The export, import, and tonnage dues paid by British vessels in same year, amounted to 534,903*l.* sterling. The exports in 1845, amounted in value to 6,622,726*l.*, and the imports to 3,046,942*l.*

On the 26th of May 1841, the Chinese troops were totally defeated, and both the river defences and the hill forts above Canton captured by the British forces, who, however, did not enter the city, a truce having been forthwith agreed to. In 1847, in consequence of various insults and grievances committed by the Chinese government, the Bogue Forts were again captured by the British, and a new convention agreed to. [CHINA. The chief mntn. chains are the Drankensteen, Zwelendani, Zwartenberg, and Sneeuw-Bergen, in which last is the Spitzkop or Compass-berg, the culminating point of the whole, estimated at 10,250 ft. in elev. Table mntn., at the S.W. extremity of the colony, is an insulated flat topped mass, 3,582 ft. in height, the

S. point of which forms the promontory of the Cape of Good Hope, 1,000 ft. in elev., in-lat.  $34^{\circ} 22' S.$ , lon.  $18^{\circ} 29' E.$  It was discovered by Diaz, a Portuguese admiral, in 1486, and called by him "Cape of Storms." Cape Agulhas, the next remarkable promontory, is the southmost point of Africa, in lat.  $34^{\circ} 51' S.$ , lon.  $20^{\circ} 2' E.$ ; it gives its name to an extensive sand bank, and to an important current which flows from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. The most extensive plain is the Great Karoo, an arid tract upwards of 200 m. in length, and 50 m. in breadth, between the Zwarteveld, and the Nienwveld mntns. The only passage from one terrace to another is through the Kloofs, narrow and difficult mntn. gorges; some of these have been made passable for wheeled carriages, but the roads in general are very bad. The principal bays are (from W. to E.) St. Helena, Table, False (the W. part of which forms Simon's bay), St. Sebastian, Mossel, Plettenberg, and Algoa. Streams are numerous, but rapid, mostly dry in summer and unfit for navigation; the chief are, on the E. and S. coast, Keiskamma, Great Fish, Bushman, Sunday, Camtoos & Breede; on the W., Berg & Elephant or Oliphant; & on the N., sev. small streams tributary to the Orange. Climate mild and healthy, but very dry; rains irregular, often falling in torrents on the coast, but rare in the plains of the interior. Snow falls only in the mntns., and is not permanent, even on the most elevated. December and January are the warmest, and June and July the coldest, months. Mean temp. at Cape Town—in summer  $58^{\circ} 3$ ; in winter  $76^{\circ} 6$ , Fahr. The greater number of diseases are unknown at the Cape; the most common are consumption & apoplexy. Few of the inhabs. attain an advanced age. Soil fertile where sufficiently watered, but the general appearance of the country is sterile and monotonous. The arid steppes or *Karoo*s of the interior are destitute of trees and covered with an ephemeral vegetation only after heavy rains. The flora of the colony is of a peculiar character, & is calculated to comprise 1,200 species, which, however, are more remarkable for the variety & heauty of their flowers than for their uses. The most valuable is the aloe, the produce of which has been exported in one year, to the amount of 2,794*l.*; a species of soda, found in the Karoo, is employed by the inhabs. in the manuf. of soap, and candles are made from the covering of the wax-berry. European grains, and the fruits of temperate and tropical regions have been successfully introd. Corn is raised more than requisite for consumption, and the cultivation of the vine is an important source of wealth; a good white wine is produced in the interior, but only the small vineyard at the foot of Table mntn. produces the celeb. liqueur called Constantia. Cattle rearing is the chief branch of rural industry; and the introduction of the Merino sheep has rendered the rural trade of the colony important. The coasts abound with mackerel and herrings, and in 1842, the whale and seal fishery employed 144 boats. Some of the wild animals of Africa are still met with, but the larger species decrease in proportion as colonisation extends. The lion, hyena, buffalo, hippopotamus, and zebra are occasionally seen; the rhinoceros is rare, and the elephant is driven beyond the boundary. The ostrich and eagle are found in the mountains, and snakes are numerous. The commerce of the colony is extensive; the ports are Cape town and Simon's town in the W., & fort Elizabeth in the E. Total value of exports in 1844, 350,735*l.*, of which

246,217. were to the U. Kingdom. Impts., same year, 424,451. In 1845, 35 ships (3,713 tons), & 307 men belonged to the colony; and in 1842, 604 ships (166,620 tons), entered, and 575 ships (159,336 tons), cleared from its ports. The colony consists of an E. and a W. prov., and these are divided into 14 districts, viz., Cape Division and Stellenbosch in the S.W., Zwelldam, George, Uitenhage, & Albany on the S. coast, Clanwilliam on the N.W., Worcester, and Beaufort, Graaf Reynet, and Somerset in the interior, Colesberg on the N.E., Cradock and Victoria on the E. The capitals have the same names as the dists., except Graham's Town, which is the cap. of Albany, and Fredericksburg of Victoria dist. Stellenbosch is the chief wine, and Zwelldam the princip. corn growing dists.; the others are mostly appropriated to grazing. The gov. is vested in a legislative council consisting of 5 official members, viz., the governor, the second in command of the forces, colonial secretary, attorney-genl., and treasurer, and 5 nofficial members, inhabs. of the colony, nominated by the governor; its debates are published. The Dutch founded a colony at the Cape in 1648, which was taken by the British in 1795. [CAPE TOWN.]

The hoers or farmers of the Cape colony, descendants of the original Dutch settlers, have lost much of their ancestral industry and cleanliness; they are affectionate in their family relations, & strict in religious observances, but prejudiced & illiterate. Education has been long neglected in the colony; the only institutions of importance were, till lately, the S. African college, and the S. African institution at Cape town; but a comprehensive system, embracing primary and classical schools, was instituted by the government in 1839. In many of the dists. are missionary schools supported by different protestant societies. In 1842, there were 40 public, and 102 private schools, attended by 2,700 children. The colonial grants in same year were, for educational purposes, 6,021., and for religious purposes, distributed among the different sects, 10,481. Slavery was abolished in 1833. The English language is alone used in courts of law, but the Dutch is also taught in the government schools. The money in use is exclus. British; & Dutch weights & measures are nearly superseded by the English. The peace of the colony is frequently interrupted by incursions of the Kaffers & other savage tribes on the frontiers.

CAPE HATTERAS, a headld., U. S., N. Amer., N. Carolina, at the angle of a long reef which lines the coast. Lat. 35° 14' N., lon. 75° 30' W.

CAPE HAYTIEN, formerly Cape Français, & Cape Henry, a seaport town of the island of Hayti, on its N. coast, 90 m. N. Port au Prince. Lat. 19° 40' N., lon. 69° 54' W. Pop. probably from 12,000 to 16,000. Previously to the Haytian revolution it was a handsome city, & it still has some fine buildings, with a secure and tolerably defended harbour, & a considerable trade, chiefly with the U. States, Great Britain, France, & Germany. In 1841, 84 vessels, aggreg. burden 11,806 tons, entered the port with cargoes valued at 136,484.; 78 vessels, burden 10,802 tons, cleared out with cargoes estimated at 162,770. in value.

CAPE HORN, or HOORN, the most S. point of America, on the last isl. of the Fugeian archip., in lat. 55° 58' 40" S., lon. 67° 16' W. It is a lofty, steep, bare, black rock, with pointed summits, & was formerly considered very dangerous to pass; but the difficulties of doubling it are now greatly diminished. It was named by Schouten, its discoverer, in honour of his birth-place, Hoorn, in the Netherlands, prov. North Holland.

CAPE ISLAND, a vill., U. S., N. Amer., New Jersey, at its extreme S. point, on the Atlantic, 108 m. S. Trenton. Frequented for sea-bathing.

Pop. 1,331.—Also several vills. mostly in the central depts.—Capellen and Capellendorf are vills. in Rhenish-Prussia & Saxe-Weimar. [KAPELLE.]

CAPELLE-OP-DEN BOSCH, a vill. of Belgium, prov. S. Brabant, 11 m. N. Brussels, on the canal thence to Antwerp, and on the railway between Mechlin and Ghent. Pop. 2,500.

CAPE MAY, a co., U. S., N. Amer., in S. part of N. Jersey. Pop. 5,324. Soil alluvial. Eastern margin indented by the Atlantic.—II. a headld., New Jersey, on the N. side of the entrance into Delaware Bay. Lat. of light-ho., S.W. point of Cape, 38° 55' N., lon. 75° 2' W.—Cape Henlopen forms the S. side of the entrance to the same bay.

CAPE MOUNT, a riv. of W. Africa, which falls into the Atlantic Ocean, in lat. 6° 44' N., lon. 11° 25' W. The dist. of Cape Mount, with its isls., lakes, and rivers, was granted by the king of the territory to an English company, by a deed, dated February 23, 1841.

CAPE RIVER, or VAUNKS, a large riv. of Cent. America, Nicaragua & Mosquito Country, enters the Carib. Sea, at Cape Gracias a Dios, after a N.E. course, estimated at from 250 to 300 m., through a territory mostly of high fertility. It is navigable from the sea for a considerable distance inland; beyond which its course is impeded by numerous cataracts and shallows. The city Segovia is near its source.

CAPERNAUM, an anc. city of Palestine, pash. Damascus, supposed to have been at Khan-Minyeh, on the W. shore of L. Tiberias, 5½ m. N.W. Tiberias. Here is a low mound with ruins occupying a considerable circuit, and near it is a copious spring called Ain-el-Zin, & supposed by Robinson to be the Capharnaum of Josephus, while Wilson would rather place its locality at Tell-el-Hum, 3½ miles to the N.E.

CAPESTANG, a comm. and town of France, dep. Herault, cap. cant., on the Canal du Midi, & near the head of a pool (etang) of same name, 47 m. W.S.W. Montpellier. Pop. 1,831.

CAPESTERRE (LA), or LE MARIGOT, a town of the isl. Guadalupe, French Antilles, cap. cant., on its E. coast, 13 m. E.N.E. Basseterre; in a healthy and fertile situation. Pop. 3,784, of whom 3,089 are slaves.—II. a town of Marie Galante.

CAPE TOWN, a fortified seaport town of S. Africa, cap. of the Cape colony on its W. coast at the N. declivity of Table mntn., and on the S.W. shore of Table bay. Lat. of observatory 33° 56' S., lon. 18° 28' 7" E., 32 m. N. "the Cape." Mean temp. of year 67° .3; winter 76° .6; sum. 58° .3, Fahr. Pop. (1842) 22,543, of whom one-third were blacks. The town, which is situ. in a plain, is defended by a castle & sev. forts; it is regularly laid out in the Dutch style, with canals in the princip. streets; the streets are broad and cross at right angles, but unpaved; the houses are flat roofed and painted or white-washed, with terraces in front. From its situation, facing the noon-day sun, & backed by naked mntns., the town is exposed to excessive heat, and is often intolerable from dust; it is also exposed to violent gales from the S.E. The only public building of importance is the governor's house, a plain but spacious edifice. There are numerous villas in the environs; and the Wynberg, a pretty hill, is a favourite resort of the wealthy inhabitants. It has a royal marine observatory, and a magnetic observatory. The educational establishments are the S. African college and the S. African institution, a good public library, and a valuable private botanic garden. There is a government bank which issues notes, and a joint stock bank with a branch at Graham's town. Cape town was constituted a bishopric in 1847. Table bay is capacious enough to contain any number of vessels but is exposed to W. winds, which from June to August produce heavy swells; its N.W. point is marked by a lightho. Cape town was founded by the Dutch in 1650, & with its subject territory was taken by the British in 1795. It was restored to the Dutch by the treaty of Amiens; recaptured by the British in 1806, and finally ceded to Britain in 1815. The Cape of Good Hope was discovered by Diaz in 1486, and called by him the "Cape of Storms."

CAPE VERD, the most W. cape of Africa, in the Atlantic Ocean, between the rivers Senegal and Gambia. Lat. 14° 43' N., lon. 17° 34' W. Its name is derived from a group of enormous baobab-trees which crowns its summit.—The isls. of Cape Verd are situated 320 m. W. of the cape, between lat. 14° 45' and 17° 13' N., and lon. 22° 45' and 25° 25' W. The archip. consists of the following 10 isls., Sal, Boavista, Mayo, Santiago (St James), the largest, Fogo, Brava, Grande, Rombo, S. Nicolào, and S. Luzia, and 4 islets, Branco, Razo, S. Vicente, and S. Antão. Area estimated at 1,680 sq. m. Pop. (last census 1834) 55,833; 51,854 free, and 3,979 slaves. In 1844 it was estimated at 67,000; the white pop. in the whole archip. is to the coloured as 1 to 20. The surface of the isls. is in general mtuous, & some of their peaks have a considerable elevation. The volcano of Fogo is 9,157 ft. in height. The soil is extremely various, but mostly fertile; the absence of trees and the scarcity of water are the causes of frequent and severe distress. Climate very hot, but tempered by the sea breezes; mean temp. of May & August 70° 9. April to Sept. 70°, during the other months 65° F.; the mornings & evenings are cool, and dews abundant. Chief vegetable products, maize, rice, & French beans. Coffee, introduced in 1790, has completely succeeded; the cotton shrub is indigenous; indigo grows wild, and tobacco is cultivated in some of the isls.; little sugar is grown, and wine of inferior quality; tropical fruits are abundant. Orchill, the trade in which was formerly monopolized by the government, & yielded an ann. rev.

of 24,000*l.*, decreased in value so rapidly after the trade was thrown open in 1837, as to require new restrictions, which were put in force in 1844. Cattle are extensively reared, and dried & salted provisions form a considerable article of export. Goats are still numerous, although many are annually killed for the sake of their skins; pigs are abundant in several of the isls. Asses and mules are the only beasts of burden. Fowls are so abundant in most of the islands that they are sold for less than 1*d.* each; serpents & venomous reptiles are unknown; whales abound in the neighbouring seas, & are fished by the English and Americans. Amber is found on all the coasts, which are frequented by immense numbers of turtle. The natives are quiet and docile, but extremely indolent; the Portuguese language is corrupted into a jargon called lingua creoula. Agriculture & the preparation of salt are chief branches of industry; linens, pottery-ware, soap, and leather are manufd. in some of the isls. In 1843-4, 217 ships entered, and 239 left the ports of the Archip.; of these 36 were British. Value of impts., 19,000*l.*, expts., 17,000*l.* These isls., together with the Portuguese possessions on the continent of Africa, near Co. Roxo, constitute the prov. of Cape Verd, the cap. of which was removed from Porto Praya to Mindello in the isl. S. Vincent, in 1838. The prov. is under a gov.-general, who exercises both civil and military power. The military force comprised in 1843, 534 men. Previous to 1840, there was only 1 school of public instruction in the archip., since then there are 12. The Roman Catholic is the only form of worship.

CAPE WRATH, forms the N.W. extremity of Scotl., co. Sutherland. Lat. 58° 37' N., lon. 5° 1' W. It is a pyramid of gneiss rising to 300 ft., and having on it a lighthouse, with a light 400 ft. above the sea.

CAPESTRANO, & CAPISTRELLO, two small towns of Naples; the former in prov. Abruzz. Ult. II., 22 m. S.E. Aquila. Pop. 2,409. The latter in same prov., 3½ m. W. Lake Fucino. Pop. 1,150.

CAPITANATA, a prov. of Naples, bounded N. & E. by the Adriatic; cap. Foggia. Climate very warm. Its pastures are rich, and many cattle are reared. Chief produce, wine, saffron, fruit, and salt. Pop. (1844) 304,323.

CAPIVARI, a modern town of Brazil, prov. Rio de Janeiro, comm. and 24 m. N.W. Cabo Frio. Pop. 3,000.

CAPIZ, a city of the Philippines, cap. of the isl. Panay, on its N. coast. Pop. 11,145. It is mostly built of wood and is defended by a small fort. It is the resid. of a Spanish alcalde, gov. of the prov.

KARLSBAD (Germ. Karlsbad, "Charles's bath,") a town of Bohemia, circ. Elbogen, on the Tüpel, near its junction with the Eger, 70 m. N.N.W. Prague, famous for its hot springs. Stationary inhabitants about 3,000; but, during the season, the pop. often amounts to 8,000. Mean temp. of year 46°; winter 36°.3; summer 63°.7, Fahr. It is the most aristocratic watering-place in Europe.

The town, which belongs to the Emperor of Austria, occupies the bottom of a narrow valley, between steep granite mountains, and consists mainly of lodging-houses and hotels for visitors. It has one handsome street, the Kunststrasse, in connexion with an elegant granite bridge across the Eger; a theatre, hospital, and several reading-rooms. The springs contain a great amount of carbonate and sulphate of soda; and the Sprudel, temp. 165° Fahr., deposits so much incrustation, and is forced upwards with such violence, that fresh orifices have to be continually bored to prevent explosions and damages to the town. The Mühlbrunnen, temp. 138° Fahr., furnishes most of the water used for drinking. Vapour baths have been constructed over the Hygienquelle. The public walks around Carlsbad are much admired. The baths are mostly frequented from June to September. Carlsbad is celebrated for the congress held there in 1819.

CAROLINA (NORTH), one of the U. States of N. America, in the S. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 33° 50' and 36° 30' N., and lon. 75° 45' and 84° W., having N. Virginia, W. Tennessee, S. Georgia & South Carolina, & E. the Atlantic. Length 430 m.; breadth 180 m. Area about 48,000 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 868,903, of whom 288,412 are slaves. The coast is bordered with sandy isls.; a marshy flat extends from the sea inland for 60 or 80 m., intersected by creeks and estuaries, the principal of which are Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds, having between them the great Alligator swamp. N. of this, extending into Virginia, is the great Dismal swamp. The cultivated portion of the state is undulating and tolerably fertile; and its E. part comprises a portion of the Appalachian mtn. chain, which here rises in sev. peaks to upwards of 6,000 ft. in ht. Princip. rivs. the Roanoke, Chowan, Neuse, Cape Fear, Pamlico, Yadkin. The climate of the low swampy plains is unhealthy; on the elevated parts of the state the air is pure and salubrious. Rice and cotton are the chief crops in the lowlands; wheat of inferior quality, rye, barley, oats, and flax are produced elsewhere; tobacco, maize, and various fruits, including grapes, are raised in every part. The pitch pine is of very prevalent growth, & affords tar, turpentine, pitch, & wood for export. Hogs are reared in large numbers. Principal mineral products, iron and gold, which last was, in 1840, produced to the value of 225,618 dollars. Capital employed in manufs. (1840) 3,838,900 dollars. In the same year 247 m. of railways had been completed in this state. Owing to the want of harbours, most part of the foreign trade is conducted through the adjacent states. In 1842, the expts. (chiefly rice, cotton, and pine timber) amounted in value to 334,650 dollars; value of imports 187,404 dolls. The first permanent settlement made in N. Carolina was about 1660; it and S. Carolina were called the country of Albemarle. The constitution (adopted 1776) consists of a senate of 50 and a house of commons of 120 members, and a governor, elected biennially by the people. It is divided into 68 cos., and sends 9 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Raleigh the cap., Wilmington, Fayetteville and Newbern.

CAROLINA (SOUTH), one of the U. States of N. America, in the S. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 32° and 35° N., and lon. 78° 24' & 83° 30' W., having E. the Atlantic, & on other sides North Carolina and Georgia. Length 200 m.; breadth 125 m. Area 24,000 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 688,507, of whom 384,925 are slaves. The coast is bounded by a chain of isls. Surface low & marshy for 100 m. from the coast; which region is succeeded by one of sand hills; country further inland is beautifully undulating, fertile, and salubrious, rising at the N.W. extremity into the Appalachian mntn. chain, which, in Table mntn., reaches to an elev. of 4,000 feet. Chief rivs. the Great Pedee, Santee, Edisto, and Savannah. Staple products are cotton and rice; the islands bordering the coast produce the famous sea-island cotton. In 1840, upwards of 60 million lbs., or 3-4ths of the whole produce of the Union, in rice, were reported to have been raised in this state. Maize, wheat, and other grains, short stapled cotton, tobacco, indigo, and some sugar and silk, are the other chief crops. Live stock are pretty numerous. Value of exports (1843) of cotton and rice, exclusive of minor produce, 10,208,340 dollars; but a large proportion of the exports from Georgia come through the port of Charleston. There is the Sanlee, and several other canals in this state; and 136 m. of railway were open in 1840. Capital empld. in manufs. (1840) 3,216,970 dollars. Public rev. (1844), 306,831 dollars. The first settlement was made at Port Royal in 1670. Constitution of S. Carolina, formed in 1790, consists of a senate of 45 members, elected for four years, and a house of representatives of 124 members, elected for two years; with a governor, & lieutenant-gov., elected by both houses of representatives for two years. It is divided into 29 dists., and sends 7 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Columbia the cap., Charleston, and Georgetown.

CAROLINE ISLANDS, or NEW PHILIPPINES (Spanish Carolinas,—Newvas Filipinas), one of the great archips. of Oceania, betw. the Philippines, the Mariannes, the Marshall isls, and Papua, extending from lat. 3° 5' to 12° N., & including the Pelew isls. (which, from the character of their inhabitants, and the history of their discovery form part of the Archip.), extend from W. to E. over a space of 2,000 miles. They are divided into numerous groups, the W. most of which, the Palao isls. or Pelew, consists of 7 large, & many small isls., all of coralline formation, flat, and affording no secure anchorage. N.E. of these is the group of Yap, the chief isl. of which is elevated, and its mntns. contain the precious metals. E. of Yap is the group Egoi, nearly all of which are low coralline isls., fertile, & partly inhabited. The other principal groups are called Siniavine, Lutke, Mordlock, Enderby, Hogolen. Ulalan, the E. most of the group, in lat. 5° 19' N., lon. 163° 6' E., is 24 m. in circumf., and has abundant supplies of water, fruit, and fish. The climate of the Carolines is mild and agreeable. The inhabitants live almost exclusively on the produce of their fishing; the greater portion are of the Malay race, & are excellent seamen. The Carolines were discovered by the Spaniard, Lopez de Villalobos, in 1543, & they were so named in honour of Charles II. These isls., nominally belong to Spain, and form part of the government of the Philippines, but the Spaniards have no settlement on any of them.

CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, or KRAPACKS (German Karpathen), form the N.E. portion of the mntn. system of S. Europe, and extend, nearly in the form of a semicircle, the concavity of which is towards the S.W., over a space of 800 m. from the Danube, near Presburg on the S.W., to a point on the same river, near Orseva on the S.E., or between lat 44° 30' and 49° 40' N., and lon. 17° and 26° E., inclosing the whole of the left basin of the Danube in Hungary. They consist of a series of mntn. groups, connected by elev. plateaus. Their chief divisions are on the W., the little Carpathians extending N.E. between the Waag and the March; the Jablunka mntns. to the E. of these; the western or proper Carpathians extending E. and S.E. from lon. 19° to 26° E., & comprising the groups of Tatra, Lomnitz, and Bisztra; and the E. Carpathians, on the S.E. of Transylvania. The culminating point is the Lomnitzer spitze, in the Tatra group, 8,779 ft. in elev.; the lower peaks vary from 200 to 3,000 ft. The principal passes are Tergova, on the route from Orsova to Temeswar; Vulcan, in the valley of the Strehe; Rothén-Thurn, in the valley of the Aluta; Türsburg, on the route from Bukharest to Kronstädt; Ojitos and Gymes, between Moldavia and Transylvania; Borgo, between Bistriz, and Bukowina; and Jablunka, on the route from Presburg to Cracow. Although the Carpathians do not attain the elevation of the Alps or the Caucasus, yet they derive a peculiar grandeur from the rugged nature, and pyramidal form of their summits; their steepest sides are generally towards the N. Granite forms the basis of the group, and this is interspersed with gneiss, hornblende, and a variety of volcanic substances. They are extremely rich in metals, including gold, silver, copper, lead, mercury, and rock salt; their valleys produce excellent grain, and their sides are covered with valuable forests.

CARTAGENA (Carthago Nova, or "New Carthage," it having been a principal colony of the Carthaginians), a celebrated city and seaport, & the chief naval arsenal of Spain, on a noble bay of the Mediterranean, prov. and 27 m. S.S.E. Murcia. Lat. 37° 36' 5" N., lon. 0° 56' 36" W. Pop. (1845) 27,727; in 1786 it contained 60,000 inhabs. It occupies the declivity of a hill, and a small plain extending to the harbour, which is one of the best in the Mediterranean, and protected from all winds by surrounding heights, & by an island on the S., which, as well as the city, is strongly fortified. The city, though dull, dilapidated and unhealthy, owing to an adjacent swamp, has some good streets and houses, numerous churches and convents, a marine school, large royal hospital, founding hospital, town-hall and custom-ho., observatory, theatre, circus, &c. In its W. division, an arsenal, docks for building men-of-war, and a bagne for galley-slaves. Its port communicates with the Segura river by the Lorca canal. Its manufs. of cordage & canvass, with trade in barilla and agricultural produce, have decayed, but it still has a valuable tunny fishery, and a glass factory recently established by an English house; and, in 1843, 14 new smelting works had been set up here. The mines of Cartagena, originally wrought by the Carthaginians, were re-discovered a few years ago; and, in 1839, the new mine of La Carmen was opened successfully by a joint-stock company. Since then, drainages and mining have proceeded vigorously. Cartagena was taken by Scipio B.C. 208, at which period Livy states that it was one of the richest cities in the world. It was ruined by the Goths; and its modern importance dates only from the time of Philip II.

CARTAGENA, or CARTHAGENA, a strongly fortified, city and seaport of S. Amer., New Granada, of which republic it is the chief naval arsenal, cap. prov., on a sandy penins. in the Caribbean Sea. of stone. It has a massive citadel, a college with about 200 pupils, various seminaries, & 2 hospitals. The temperature is very high, from 80° to 86° Fahr., but the air dry and healthy. Its excellent port is defended by two forts, and is the only harbour on the N. coast of New Granada adapted for repairing vessels. Cartagena is the principal depôt for the produce of the provs. watered by the Cauca and Magdalena rivers. In 1843 its exports amounted in value to 265,520*l.*, and imports to 149,250*l.*; in 1845, 37 vessels, aggregate burden 6,361 tons, entered the port with cargoes valued at 116,692*l.*; and cleared with other cargoes 87,241*l.* Its foreign trade in sugar, cotton, coffee, tobacco, hides, &c., has since declined in favour of Savanilla, a small port 60 m. distant, & the exports of Cartagena will probably continue to be confined mostly to specie and bullion, until the opening of a canal, now in progress of formation, to connect it with the river Magdalena. Under the Spaniards, this city was the seat of a Captain-general, & of one of the three tribunals of the inquisition in America.

CASHGAR, Chinese-Turkestan. [KASHGAR.]

CASHMERE, OR KASHMIR, a country of the N. W. Hindostan, Pnnjab dom., consisting of the upper valley of the riv. Jaihum (anc. Hydaspes), betw. lat. 33° 15' & 34° 30' N., & lon. 73° 40' & 75° 30' E., enclosed on all sides by ranges of the Himalaya, separating it N. and E. from Tibet, and S. and E. from the Pnnjab. Estim. area 4,600 sq. m. Pop. in 1832, estim. at 800,000; but in 1836, owing to earthquakes, cholera, and famine, it had declined to 200,000. The valley of Cashmere has an average elevation of 5,500 or 6,000 ft. above the sea. Several mntns. around it rise to 15,000 ft., & one in E. Cashmere reaches to 19,650 feet in height. The country well-watered by the Jaihum riv. & its numerous tributaries, is highly picturesque. There are about a dozen of passes through the mntns., 4 of which are practicable at all times of the year. The Pangal Mntns. are of basalt; and limestone and marble are common, but primary rocks rare, and few metals or important minerals. There are 3 lakes in one valley connected with the river. Snow covers the country for 5 winter months, but the temp. then is seldom much below the freezing point. Rain falls copiously in spring, and early summer. The summer heat varies from 75° to 85° Fahr. Earthquakes are common; in 1828 1,200 persons perished by one. The soil on the bases of the mntns. and valley is a rich loam, with sub-soil of clay. Rice is the principal crop; wheat, maize, millet, barley, melons, cucumbers, & other Europ. fruits and vegetables; tobacco, cotton, oil-seeds, and Indian hemp are also raised; and Cashmere supplies most part of Hindostan with saffron, flowers, and especially roses, are abundant. The water-hily & water-nut (trapa-bispinosa), grow in great abundance, and are used for food, of the latter 60,000 tons are raised every year; floating gardens constructed in the lakes, raise abundance of vegetables. Bees, kept in hives constructed in the houses, produce excel. honey. The natives are of a tall robust frame of body, with manly features—the women full-formed and handsome, with aquiline nose and features, resembling the Jewish. Dress of both sexes a long loose woollen wrapper and trowsers. The language is a dialect of Sanscrit with a mixture of Persian. The country abounds with monuments of great antiquity. The staple wealth of Cashmere long consisted in its shawls, woven from the inner hair or down of goats, fed on the table-land of Tibet, at from 16,000 to 17,000 ft. above the sea, and which article is imported by way of Leh in Little Tibet. Some years ago the annual value of the shawls manufactured in Cashmere was estim. at 300,000l.; but the amount has since greatly diminished, without the manufacture itself having at all deteriorated; and in 1837 there were only about 3,000 shawl-looms, at each of which 2 or 3 men were employed. Other manufs. are lacquered wares in great variety, excellent leather and saddlery, paper, attar of roses, cutlery, glass-ware and articles in rock-crystal, rhacodomy. Baron Hügel, in 1836, estimated the total value of the exports at 400,000l. a year, the principal articles being woollen fabrics to 260,000l. and rice to 100,000l.; the imports he valued at 50,000l. of which amount, about 3-5ths were paid for shawl-wool. Public rev. in 1836 was estimated at from 200,000l. to 220,000l., and public expenditure at 115,000l. Inhabitants mostly Moham-medans. Cashmere contains 10 towns, and upwards of 2,000 vill. Principal towns, Serinagar (or Cashmere), Chapiani, Islamabad, & Pamjiv. It is considered a holy land by Hindoes; and it has numerous Buddhist antiquities. In 1586 the country was conquered by the Mogul Emperor Akbar. In 1752 it was subjugated by the Afghans, and remained under their sway till it fell into the power of the Sikhs in 1819.
